F. W. CRIDER ROBBED IN ATLANTIC CITY HOTEL

Slept Peacefully While Thieves Rifled His Clothing.

GOT WATCH AND MONEY

Burglars Overlooked Tray of Diamond Rings Belonging to Mrs. Crider and Which were in a Trunk that Happened to be Unlocked.

While Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Crider, of Bellefonte, were asleep in their room in an Atlantic City hotel last Tuesday night burglars entered and stole everything of value in Mr. Crider's clothing. For their daring work the burglars were rewarded with Mr. Crider's gold watch and Masonic charm and considerable money.

The robbery was so bold as to suggest that it was the work of experts. So cleverly did they handle the job that they not only effected an entrance to the room but moved about within a few inches of the bed in which Mr. Crider was sleeping and later went through numerous papers removed from his clothing before taking their departure. While Mr. Crider was cleaned out of every cent he had with him as well as his watch, the thieves overlooked a box containing a number of diamond rings belonging to Mrs. Crider. The box was in the top tray of a trunk that stood just a few feet from the spot where the thieves rifled Mr. Crider's clothing. The trunk happened not to be locked, which fact possibly led the thieves to assume that it contained nothing in the way of money or jewels. Mr. and Mrs. Crider, although they usually do not sleep soundly, did not know they had been robbed until they awoke about 6 o'clock Friday morning.

When Mr. Crider retired Tuesday night he hung his vest on the bed a few feet from his head. In the vest was his gold watch, given to him by his father, the late P. B. Crider, about twenty-five years ago, and a wallet containing all the money he happened to have with him to cover hotel bills and other traveling expenses. His trousers, hanging nearby a window, contained a few dollars in change. The thieves went through his trousers but did not bother taking anything but such money as they could find. They then removed the vest from the head-board of the bed, to reach which they had to stand within a few inches of Mr. Crider's head. Securing the vest the thieves spread a blanket on the floor at the foot of the bed and proceeded to search for articles of value. After removing all the money it contained the wallet was tossed to one side, as were also various papers which had first been opened and examined. Just as silently as they had entered the room the thieves took their departure. So thoroughly did they clean out Mr. Crider that he was left without even enough change to purchase a newspaper when he walked into the hotel office the following morning.

R. B. Taylor Makes Bid for State Road.

State Highway Commissioner Black, of Harrisburg, received bids on Tuesday for grading and draining a piece of State road in Somerset county, extending from Meyersdale to Gherrett, a distance of 20,109 lineal feet. Among the bidders was R. B. Taylor, of Bellefonte, whose bid is $81,428.35. The other two bids were as follows: Hoblitzel & Price, of Meyersdale, $114,977.30; William C. Evans, of Ambler, $147,711.28. The road is to be twenty-six feet wide. The contract has not been given.

A Thing of the Past.

The rails on the Nittany Valley railroad have been taken up and that enterprise is now a thing of the past. The only thing that remains to tell of the prosperous days when the Nittany Furnace was in full blast are the rotten ties. How different would have been the conditions if the furnace had been left standing for just one year longer; they would be making iron and coining all kinds of money. If our foresight was as good as our hindsight we'd all be millionaires.

The Red Cross.

The Bellefonte Branch of the American Red Cross organized two Auxiliaries last week. Port Matilda and Yarnell are now preparing to join the women of Centre county in working for the soldiers.

The Benjamin Wheeler Sewing Society of the Colored church of Bellefonte made shirts for the English soldiers which will be sent through the emergency aid English committee.

Here Are The Numbers And Names Of The First 800 Men Drafted In Centre County They Will Be Called In The Order Given As Services May Be Required

The Republican publishes in this issue the names of the first eight hundred men drafted in Centre County for the new federal army. The names appear in the order drafted. In all likelihood, these eight hundred names will cover not only the number to be called for the first army, but also Centre County's quota when a second army is raised, which may be late in the fall.

For the first army Centre County will have to furnish about sixty-two men, only. This is because credits have been allowed this county for all men in Troop L, the Boal Mounted Machine Gun Troop, and enlistments in the regular army, the navy and the hospital corps. For a second army, however, Centre County will have to furnish probably 300 men. The War Department at Washington has estimated that fifty per cent. of the number drafted will be rejected because of physical, occupational or dependency causes. In this event likely the first 130 men in the order drafted will have to be examined to furnish the 62 which this county must supply.

To understand the draft situation, the reader should keep in mind first that each of the 3171 persons registered in Centre County has been drafed. Men will be called in the order in which they have been drafted; that is, those drafted first will be called first. When the desired number of men for the first army is secured from this county no more will be called. The same method will apply to raising the second army. Unless a third or fourth army is raised many of those drafed from Centre County probably will never be called because they are too far down the list in the order drafted. As each man is called to present himself for examination he will be formally notified of the fact by mail. This notification will come from the local board, the members of which are Sheriff Yarnell and County Commissioner Grove. Dr. McGirk, of Philipsburg, originally appointed as the physician and third member of the board, resigned. Dr. Locke, of Bellefonte, was then appointed but he, too, resigned.

The local board will meet this week to prepare the official list of Centre Countians in the order drafted and send out notices to those who must appear for examination and also to take up the matter of exemptions. The work in hand will likely keep the board busy for the next month, or possibly longer. Following are the names of the first eight hundred Centre Countians drafted and the order in which their numbers were drawn last Friday at Washington :

SCRATCH ON HIS FINGER CAUSED MAN'S DEATH

Wm. Mitterling Dies from Blood Poisoning at Centre Hall.

WAS LIVESTOCK DEALER

Trifling Wound on Hand from Thorn Received Two Weeks Ago Developed Infection and Death Ensued After Intense Suffering.

William Mitterling, a well known resident of Centre Hall and dealer in livestock, died at his home on Tuesday, at noon, from blood poisoning.

About two weeks ago Mr. Mitterling scratched one of his fingers with a thorn. The wound was so trifling that he thought nothing of it at the time. A few days later, however, he felt some pain in the finger and before long swelling developed. Emergency remedies were applied and finally a physician was called in. The infection had gained such headway, however, that all efforts to check it met with no success and Mr. Mitterling's condition assumed such a character as to occasion the greatest anxiety to the family. On Monday night he was seized with convulsions, which recurred at frequent intervals. Mr. Mitterling is upward of 60 years old and has always enjoyed rugged health.

Automobile Accident.

Sunday afternoon Wilfred Miller, of Bellefonte, agent for the Grant automobile, desiring to make some of his friends happy by taking them out riding, met with an accident that might have been very serious. About 3 o'clock he left the Brandt House with his wife, Miss Margaret Noonan, and her two cousins, Misses Ruth and Louise Seymore, of New York City. Their destination was Tyrone and when on the other side of Unionville Mr. Miller, while attempting to let another car pass, drove too near a ten foot embankment. Result was the ground gave away and the car toppled over into the ditch, Miss Noonan being the only unfortunate one. As the car struck the ground her left foot was caught in the wreckage and two small bones broken in the ankle. The young lady was brought to Bellefonte and taken to the hospital. An x-ray picture taken by photographer Ralph Mallory showed the injury. The bones were promptly set and the young lady is getting along as well as can be expected. One wheel on the car was broken and the fenders smashed.

Women Injured.

On the 7th of July, Mrs. Leo Marks, of Hollidaysburg, came to Bellefonte, to visit her brother, Howard Casper, on Curtin street, for the balance of the month. She is a woman who weighs close to 300 pounds and thus anything she steps on must be very substantial. Sunday afternoon she was out in the back yard and had the misfortune of stepping on some boards over a hole when they gave way. She fell in such a way as to sprain her left leg, causing her severe pain. Mrs. Mortimer Smith seeing the distress she was in called Mr. Smith and with the aid of her husband and her brother, she was carried into the house. At first it was thought her leg was broken but she escaped with a few bruises outside of the sprain. However, it is about as painful as though it had been broken.

The Troop L. Truck.

The money has been raised for the Ford truck which was so badly needed by Troop L. It has been received and the soldiers are already using it to good advantage. The citizens of Bellefonte have subscribed liberally for which Captain Curtin and his men return thanks. Harry Valentine, who has been devoting considerable time to the collection of this money, reports the following latest contributors to the fund. Col. W. F. Reynolds, $50; P. S. of A., $10; Mrs. F. P. Green, $5; Frank Mayes, $5; George Carpeneto, $1; Mrs. C. E. D. Phelps, $1, and Mary Sherlock, $1; Mrs. J. H. Bailey, Pennsylvania Furnace, $2.

Notice to the Public.

Friday evening at 8 o'clock, there will be a citizens meeting in the office of Blanchard & Blanchard. The object is to get the idea of the people with reference to giving Troop L a big send off before leaving for the mobilization camp and then to France. It seems to be the general opinion that a public ovation be tendered the boys before leaving. Let there be a large turnout.

EDMUND BLANCHARD,
Burgess.

$846 FOR TROOP L

Neat Sum Raised for Mess Fund When Cavalry Boys Go to the Front.

When you come to realize it the matter of our soldiers going to France requires considerable thought on the part of those who have a large company of men in charge. Captain H. Laird Curtin, of Troop L, Bellefonte, is therefore very solicitous for the best interest of his men. He may meet difficulties over which he has no control but the main thing he is trying to do is to keep the men in such physical condition that they can fight if called upon. An adequate mess fund will have much to do with the health of the soldiers. To meet this emergency a festival, dance and sociable were held on Saturday evening. The dance was held in the armory and the sociable and festival on the High School commons.

Early in the evening the soldiers, headed by the Boys Band of Milesburg, paraded the streets after which there was a general assembling of the people on the commons. The crowd was large and everybody opened their pocket books and contributed to the good cause. During the day Max Gamble, with his big car, assisted by Harry Dunlap and others canvassed the town for everything that would be saleable at a place of that kind. The people gave generously and the result was that they had abundance of everything. Instead of selling candies, pies and cakes in the ordinary way they were chanced off with a paddle wheel in charge of William Walker and Robert Valentine. Ice cream and cake were sold at tables in the ordinary way. During the evening there was a drill by the soldiers and other stunts. Those who cared to dance went to the armory. The financial result was that $566 was taken in. From this about $100 was deducted, which left a balance of $466 for the Troop which was a good evening's work. Friday afternoon Luther Crissman, Max Gamble, Earl Kline, Charles Gates and Harold Hobison drove to Snow Shoe and collected $105 from the good citizens on the top of the mountain. On the way they stopped at Unionville where generous citizens contributed $50. On Saturday the trustees and members of the Country Club held their annual meeting at their handsome club house at Hecla and before the meeting was over they raised a purse of $125 for the Troop. There was about $100 raised by the tag sale which was continued for several days. The following is a summary of the net gain from all sources.

Proceeds	$466.00
Gift from Country Club	125.00
Snow Shoe contributions	105.00
Income from tag sale	100.00
Unionville contributions	50.00
Total	$846.00

Some Dock Space.

Few realize the tremendous details incurred in the despatch of the American Expeditionary force to France, but an announcement of the war department on Friday gives some insight to the work and the supplies required. The largest dock firm in the United States has contracted with the government, to build dockage space for 1,000,000 men and 50,000 tons of supplies daily, and that all the machinery and derricks for this stupendous wharf plan will be transported from the United States to France. In addition General Pershing's experts have ordered 125 miles of four inch pipe, 270,000 shovels (at the rate of 6,000 per month), 300,000 picks, 60 steam rollers and 300,000,000 board feet of lumber—the last item to be furnished in France, and to be used for the building of portable barracks for the "Sammies," as no tents will be used at the front. Thus it will be seen that war is not all fighting by any manner of means.

Stenographers Needed.

The United States government needs, and needs badly, great numbers of stenographers and typewriters both men and women, for service in the departments at Washington, D. C., and the situation in federal offices outside of Washington is scarcely less urgent. The supply of qualified persons on the United States Civil Service lists for this class of work is not equal to the demand.

Examinations for the departmental service in Washington, D. C., for both men and women are held every Tuesday in 400 of the principal cities of the United States.

Examinations for the Field Service (positions outside of Washington) are held frequently. Persons wishing to take this examination should apply to the United States Civil Commission at Washington, D. C.

Mountain Hermit Dead.

William Barnes, the aged hermit of the Seven Mountains, is dead. He was found in his mountain home Sunday totally paralyzed and in a dying condition by a chance caller. It is believed he was starved, as no one knows how long the recluse had been without food. His farm animals and chickens were dead from lack of attention. Barnes lived alone in his humble cabin for more than a score of years. No one in this community recalls when he had communicated with the outside world. His family of a widow and eight children years ago left him and separated.

NEW FROG LAW

Use of Lights in Catching or Killing Them Prohibited by Legislature.

Centre County boys who derive considerable pleasure from catching bull frogs will be interested to learn the provisions of a law bearing on the subject enacted by the recent Legislature and approved by the Governor on May 29th. Heretofors the popular method for catching bull frogs at night has been to blind them with a strong light. Moreover, a person was not limited in the number of frogs caught or killed in a day. The new law prohibits the use of lights in catching or killing frogs and limits the number caught or killed in a day to twenty-five. On the subject of using lights, the law says:—

"From and after the passege of this act it shall be unlawful to catch, take, or kill any bullfrogs by the use of a light at night. Any person violating any of the provisions of this section shall on conviction thereof as provided in section eight of this act, be subject to a penalty of twenty-five dollars."

The section eight referred to in the foregoing paragraph outlines the manner of instituting proceedings before a justice of the peace, alderman or magistrate and specifies that where a person is convicted and fined and refuses or fails to pay the fine he shall be imprisoned in the county jail for a period of one day for each dollar of fine so imposed.

Olewine—Gilbert.

Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock a very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Gilbert, at Landsdowne, a suburb of Philadelphia. The bride was their daughter, Miss Ethel Gilbert, and the groom was Harrison Olewine, only son of Mrs. John I. Olewine, of Bellefonte. After a reception and congratulations, followed by a sumptuous wedding feast the young bride and groom left in a touring car for a trip through the New England States, stopping at Hartford, Conn., and many other points along the line.

The bride is a young lady of pleasing manner who has been in Bellefonte on several occasion, and while here made hosts of friends. She is quite a talented young lady and will make the groom an excellent helpmate through life. The groom is a graduate of State College and for a year or so held a position in the Illinois University, located at Champaign. He has resigned that position and has accepted a similar one in the chemistry department of State College, under Dr. Pond, the chemist. We have not been informed as to their future arrangements but it is altogether probable they will make their home at State College. Mrs. Olewine, mother of the groom, and his sister, Adaline Olewine, of Bellefonte, were among the wedding guests.

Food Demonstration Train.

Beginning July 23 and continuing until August 4, a food demonstration and exhibit train is being run by the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company from Easton to Sayre in charge of members of the home economics extension staff of the Pennsylvania State College. Sixteen stops will be made by this train. Miss M. Jane Newcomb, Miss Martha S. Pittman and Mrs. M. L. McLean, of the State College staff are giving canning and drying demonstrations each day and answering any questions that may be asked. There are exhibits of canned goods, dried materials, food products, canning and drying apparatus, and charts suggesting food requirements and foundation menus. Incidental features include exhibits of children's clothing, house dresses and suitable samples of material to be used for different types of garments and sketches showing good and bad figure lines for clothing.

Drafted Men May Enlist.

Those selected for service under the draft will be permitted to enlist in the regular army or national guard at any time prior to their call for examination before exemption boards, probably ten days hence, Provost Marshall General Crowder announced recently. They will not be allowed, however, to join the marine corps.

The first men actually drafted probably will be detailed to the regular army in order to bring that branch up to its full war strength of 300,000, if the 35,000 enlistments needed are not obtained before examinations begin. The rest will be put into the national guard. Exemption machinery for virtually the entire country is complete.

Road Route Changes.

Among the changes in highway routes made in the omnibus highway bill, approved by the Governor Saturday with mileage saved or added, are the following:

Route 100, from Emportum to Smethport through Sizerville and Port Allegheny, miles increased two.

Route 58, from Bellefonte to Lock Haven, by way of Nittany and Mill Hall, miles increased 11; adds pur to Loganton.

Route 63, from Indiana to Brookville, through Marion Centre and Punxsutawney, decrease of 4 4 miles.

Route 268, from Greensburg to Waynesburg, through Charleroi and West Brownsville, decrease of three-tenth mile.

Route 261, Bellefonte to Huntingdon, through Milroy and Reedsville and McAlevys Fort—Decrease of 3.7 miles.

Let's Be On the Square.

Everybody in Bellefonte knows that there is too much fast driving of automobiles within the borough limits. There is a traffic ordinance which prohibits fast driving but it might as well be inscribed on ice as on the minute book of Council, because nobody cares a continental for it. This is certainly belittling those who passed it, but how can it be otherwise when the police make arrests and because of the high standing of the violators in the community they are let go and relieved of any fine. The fact of the case is the ordinance up until this time has been nothing more than a laughing matter and joke.

Recently the Borough Council has gone to the expense of providing for traffic posts which cost $24.00. One of them stands on High street, at the enterance of south Water street. Another is located at the junction of Allegheny and Bishop streets and two of them in the Diamond. The idea is a good one but on Sunday officer Dukeman took the numbers of ten cars which had violated this new way of regulating the traffic. Monday morning came and upon the proper authority the officer was instructed not to bring action. Mayor Blanchard has decided to give the public a week to become accustomed to the new idea and after that there will be respect of persons made or favors shown. Bellefonte is the only place within a radius of many miles where autoists can just do as they pleased. The posts are up and the public can surely discriminate between what is right and what is wrong in the matter. Give the "Devil his Dues" is all that is necessary and be partial to none. How are the policemen of Bellefonte to perform their duty in any other way? The true and manly way is to fine everybody who violates the law. They will kick, but get the money and let them kick.

Mrs. Frantz Admits Shooting Daniel Sharrar.

The Tyrone Herald says that the Sharrars and Frantzs, of Bald Eagle valley, are again in the limelight there having been another shooting affray there Wednesday of last week and according to the story of Mrs. Ephriam Frantz, who came to Tyrone Thursday morning and appeared before Justice of the Peace Howard B. Calderwood and told of the shooting of Daniel Sharrar. From her testimony it seems that there had been a long standing feud between the two families for some time and that when Sharrar is drinking he is the source of more or less devilment in the community. He had been annoying Mrs. Frantz for some time and when advances were made upon her Wednesday she procured a shot gun and let him have the contents of one barrel where she thought he needed it most. Sharrar came to Tyrone and had the fine shot picked from his anatomy and, it said, proceeded to Altoona to secure redress, the local authorities having long since tired of his escapades. Mrs. Frantz admitted the shooting Thursday.

Salary Raises for County Superintendents Approved.

Salary increases for both county school superintendents and their assistants were provided for in an amendment to the school code approved recently by Governor Brumbaugh.

The code had provided that the superintendents get between $1,500 and $2,000. The amendment makes this from $2,000 to $2,500. A superintendent may receive more if a convention of school directors so votes.

Assistants' salaries are to be $1,800 instead of $1,200.

The McVickar amendment to the borough code was also approved. The Governor issued a memorandum stating that the bill has bad features, but on the whole it was just what was needed. He expressed the hope that the next Legislature would correct the faults.

Army Outfit Ordered.

There are a large number of the members of Company L, of Bellefonte, who are going around without uniforms because of the inability of the manufacturers to make prompt delivery.

Clothing and camp equipment for the first million men of the new armies will be delivered by September 1st, the tentative date of the mobilization of the first increment of the national army. A statement issued by the war department says that adequate supplies for all the National Guards and national army will be available by the time the troops are called out.

The department has already equipped 300,000 men. National Guard and regulars, and the troops in France have with them stores to last six months.

Newspapers United.

On Wednesday, July 18th, the Lock Haven Express and the Clinton Dispatch, two of the best papers in Clinton-Lycoming belt, merged into one paper and hereafter will be known as the Lock Haven Express. The new paper, the Lock Haven Express, appeared on last Thursday under the new management and editorial staff, and from appearances it will take its place among the leading inland daily papers of the State.

For any itching skin trouble, piles, eczema, salt rheum, hives, itch, scald head, herpes, scabies. Doan's Ointment is highly recommended. 50c a box at all stores.

LET EVERYBODY TAKE NOTICE

Court Plaster Sellers Arrested on Suspicion.

There are a great many pro-Germans in America who are doing their level best to bring distress upon this country in various ways, thinking it will have a tendency of making the American people ease up on the Kaiser. Recently there was a woman in Bellefonte selling court plaster and from what we can understand she disposed of quite a large amount of it. She was a stranger and from what we know she was doing a legitimate business. However, there were three men arrested near New Bloomfield, Perry county on Friday, said to be of German birth, charged with selling poisoned court plaster. The Sheriff of Perry county was at once notified and with several deputies went and arrested the peddlers. The federal authorities have heard that the German sympathizers are scattering this kind of stuff abroad and have notified the authorities of every county, to be on the lookout for the kind of persons and report them at once. The people of Centre county should go to the local drug stores and get medicine or court plaster and purchase nothing of this kind from peddlers who are here today and away tomorrow.

U. B. Flag Raising.

The United Brethren Congregation of Bellefonte is not behind when it comes to patriotism from the fact that Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock there was a large flag raised in front of the church on the corner of High and Thomas streets. The pole upon which it was flung to the breeze rises fifty feet above ground. Dr. Ambrose Schmidt, of the Reformed church, Dr. W. K. McKinney, of the Presbyterian church, and J. K. Johnston made appropriate addresses and Dr. Ezra H. Yocum made the prayer. The other local preachers present were Dr. Glanding, of the Lutheran church, and Rev. Dunn, of the Evangelical church. During the exercises Miss Pearl MacLeod, daughter of Rev. Hugh MacLeod, the pastor, recited a selection entitled 'Show the Flag. The services were of an interesting character and attracted a large audience.

A Call for Farm Hands.

John Price Jackson, formerly of State College, but who is at the head of the Labor Department Harrisburg, is making an appeal for all able-bodied men to spend their vacation on a Pennsylvania farm aiding in the harvesting of the grain and fruit. He has received requests for thousands of men from farms in all sections of the State. More than 2500 men have already been enrolled for this service by the State Employment Bureau and approximately 1000 of these workers are today on farms. Some will be in the fields for one week, some for two weeks. A vacation plan is being inaugurated by Prof. Jackson by which clerks and other competent indoor men throughout the State, taking their vacations in late summer, may do their bit by aiding in the harvesting and shipment of peach and apple crops.

Miss Hafer Going to France.

Miss Jean Hafer, daughter of the late Aaron W. Hafer, of Bellefonte, who for a number of years has been a trained nurse in New York City, in the near future will be one among a number of nurses who will leave for France to make preparations for taking care of the wounded of the American army. About two years ago Miss Hafer visited friends in Bellefonte. She is an exceptionally fine young lady who possesses more than usual tact and ability in her chosen profession. Like millions of others she is taking her life in her hands and her friends here wish her success and finally be permitted to return to America to live under a government that frees the world from fulure war and bloodshed.

Five Thousand Loaves of Bread.

Over five thousand loaves of "bread like mother used to make" are produced daily by the Marine Corps bakers in their giant bakery at the Recruit depot at Port Royal, S. C. This amount is required for feeding the recruits undergoing the "two-in-one" Marine Corps course of intensive training for modern warfare.

"First to Fight" also means "First to Eat" say the marines, and they believe their "chow" is fully as important as their military education.

Change of Presbyterian Services.

On account of the small attendance and the extremely hot weather the Bellefonte Presbyterians have abandoned the mid-week prayer services until the week of September 1st. Sunday evenings the services will be held on the lawn between the church and the chapel which is an excellent move. Last Sabbath evening there was a large attendance and everybody was impressed with the service. Remember it commences at 7 o'clock instead of 7.30.

Clearfield and Centre's Quota.

The figures on the quota of conscripts to be supplied by Clearfield county are as follows:

Gross quota	974
Total enlistment credit	267
Net quota	707

Centre county's quota is as follows:

Gross quota	371
Total enlistment credit	309
Net quota	62

THAT BACKACHE SPELLS DANGER!

Action Today May Save Bellefonte People Future Misery.

A bad back isn't a bad thing if it serves as a warning of hidden kidney disorders. Kidney diseases are frightfully common today. We over-do so much. We don't give the kidneys a chance to rest up, and while a bad back, some bladder disorder, an occasional dizzy spell or a persistent headache may be the only outward sign, the kidney trouble that is behind it all may be overlooked or neglected. Put your signs to use. Take them as warnings. Fight off kidney weakness. It takes only a slight kidney disorder to start a case of fatal Bright's disease, from which 100,000 people die in the United States every year. Prompt treatment at first—that's all that's necessary to keep kidney weakness from turning into gravel, dropsy, gout, heart trouble or Bright's. Use Doan's Kidney Pills—the oldest, the most widely used, the best recommended Kidney Pill. Fifty thousand Americans recommend them publicly. Here's one Bellefonte case:

Mrs. B. Holter, Pine St., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills off and on for about two years. Whenever a cold or strain causes a dull, constant ache across the small of my back I use a box of Doan's and get relief. Another of the family has also been benefited by Doan's Kidney Pills."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—Get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Holter had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfgrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

Circus Goes to the Wall.

It is reported that the Coop and Lent circus which exhibited in Bellefonte this summer was stranded in Connellsville a few days ago by reason of the Dixon Amusement Co. of Dixon, Ill., going into bankruptcy. It is said that the circus will be advertised and sold at public auction at Connellsville. All the lions, tigers, elephants, 110 horses and ponies, tent equipment, wardrobe and twenty railroad cars will go on the block. The show carried three hundred performers and laborers, many of whom are said to have been left high and dry without a cent when the company went under.

W. P. Humes Raises Flag.

Sunday morning it was expected that some of the members of Troop L, of Bellefonte, would attend the regular services of the Bellefonte Presbyterian church and afterward assist in the flag raising but owing to the fact that many of them went home on a furlough over Sunday the seats reserved for them in the church remained vacant. Dr. McKinney was compelled to cut out a portion of his sermon which had been appropriately prepared for the occasion.

At the close of the service the congregation assembled in front of the church to witness the unfurling of a large flag from the top of the tower. It was raised to its place by William P. Humes, an elder in the church and one of the oldest communicants. This was followed by the reading of a poem on the flag by Dr. McKinney the pastor. After singing a patriotic hymn the congregation was dismissed with the benediction. The flag is quite a large one and is on an elevation where it can be seen for a considerable distance.

The Redfield Will

It Looked All Right When Made, but Did Not Pan Out Well

By F. A. MITCHEL

When the late John Redfield's will was opened it was learned that all his property—a goodly fortune—was left to his daughter Anne, with the condition that she marry the testator's right hand man of business, Theodore Griffin. Griffin had been in charge of the Redfield company for some time before its founder's demise, and since he was the only man who could squeeze a profit out of it there was no necessity for making any other provision for its management. Nothing was said in the will as to a refusal of Griffin to marry Anne Redfield. Her father when she was passing into womanhood had told her that it was his intention to give her a good manager for the fortune he would leave her, in the person of Griffin. Anne was then too young to consider the importance of the plan to her, and her father was led to believe that she would make no objection to it when the time came to fulfill the conditions. There was no doubt about Griffin's acceding to it.

This is why the will made no mention of a refusal on the part of Griffin to marry the heiress. If she refused to marry him the stock of the Redfield company, which would otherwise be hers, would go to Griffin. The residue of the estate would in this case be divided between several charitable institutions in which the testator had been much interested during his life.

Mr. Redfield died four years after mentioning the matter to his daughter. When he did so she was fifteen. At the time of his death she was nineteen. She had told some of her schoolmates that she was to marry Griffin and had made no objection to doing so. At that time it was a matter for the future, and she considered it a matter of course, as a boy may do who is brought up to understand that he is to enter a certain profession.

But when Anne Redfield at nineteen found herself an orphan and called upon to fulfill the conditions of her father's will she was a woman and had a lover who had nothing whatever to do with the condition except that if she married him she would give up a fortune.

David Corwin was the young man who had stepped in to prevent John Redfield's well conceived plan from being smoothly worked out. David had been attentive to Anne for some time before her father's death, but Mr. Redfield was not observant, and quite often parents who are watchful fail to detect a love affair that is developing right under their noses. This one came to a head during Mr. Redfield's last illness.

When the will was read Anne was reminded of something the importance of which she had not realized and which, never having been mentioned to her since she was fifteen years old, she regarded as a dead letter. But even now it did not occur to her that Griffin would force himself upon her, she being unwilling. She sent for him and told him that she could not marry her father's choice for her without violation to her feelings. Griffin replied that he had promised her father to do his part in carrying out the plan; if Anne would not do her part he saw no way but that the property, other than the business, must go to the charities named in the will.

Anne consulted a lawyer, who told her that under the terms of the will she must marry Griffin to inherit her property. There was but one way out of the dilemma, and that was for Griffin to refuse to marry her. This would make the will inoperative, and she would inherit as heir at law, the same as if there were no will, she being the only child and there being no widow.

Anne did not understand the legal distinctions in the case, but she did understand that her inheriting her property and marrying the man she wanted depended on Griffin's declining to marry her. She sent for Griffin and reported what the attorney had said.

"This plan," replied Griffin, "was inaugurated by your father. It received my sanction, and he told me that you had made no objection to it. I would not be justified in thwarting it by putting you in a position to render it inoperative. I regret that the carrying it out has become obnoxious to you, but that fact would not excuse me if I become a party to nullifying it."

"But father could have had no object in making such a will except to insure, so far as he could, my happiness. Four years ago he told me about this plan, and I gave my consent to it. Had I refused that consent I am quite sure he would not have made such a will. I was then a child. Now I am a woman. Father never intended that I should marry a man I did not wish to marry."

"Your father doubtless knew that your happiness largely depended upon the possession of the fortune he had been at such pains to build up. He was aware that a girl of your age is not able to manage a large concern. His money is all invested in the business, and every one knows that a business without a manager will soon go to ruin. If you marry a man who is not capable of managing yours you will be reduced to poverty. I am sure I am warranted in saying that no man is capable of managing it who has not been brought up for the purpose. Your father brought me up for that very purpose. His object in providing in the will that you should marry me was to insure to you the enjoyment of the wealth he was leaving you. Had he left you free to marry whom you liked you would doubtless have married some young man utterly unfitted to manage a fortune that was tied up in a very intricate business. The result would have been what I have said—ruin for the business and poverty for you. He brought you up with the understanding that you were to marry the manager of the business he left you."

This sounded so plausible that for the time being Griffin appeared in Anne's eyes a very noble man. It seemed to her that she was the guilty one in not carrying out her father's wishes, to which she had tacitly consented. Nevertheless her whole being rebelled against a marriage with Griffin. Indeed, it was not to be thought of. She would marry the man of her choice even if she must relinquish a fortune. She was quite sure he would marry her even if she were poor as a church mouse.

But Anne found on consultation with others that they were not disposed to take her view of Griffin's noble motives in not permitting her to enjoy her inheritance with the man she loved by refusing to marry her. Her lawyer told her frankly that Griffin wanted the half million of dollars he would get with her. Corwin said that he wanted her, fortune or no fortune, but some way must be found to persuade or force Griffin to refuse to marry her, thus enabling her to come into her own. He consulted lawyers, who told him that to comply with the statutes Griffin must voluntarily refuse. He could not be trapped or forced into a refusal.

There was a time limit in the will to Anne's marriage with Griffin. By the time she was twenty-one she must marry him or lose her property. When her father died she had just turned nineteen. Therefore two years remained before she was compelled to decide. It was decided between David and Anne that David should go to some unknown place. Anne had not told Griffin that he had a rival, and it was determined to still keep the matter a secret. There was no difficulty in doing this, for thus far it was known only to Anne and David.

Theodore Griffin was one of those men who combine the social and business world. His success lay in becoming intimate with rich persons and using them in a business way. He used his club, his friends, even his church, for profit. One evening at the opera, scanning the occupants of the boxes, he encountered a pair of binoculars in the hands of a handsomely dressed woman leveled upon him. The glasses were dropped at once, but Griffin wondered why the woman, who was young and well favored, had been gazing at him. Later, pointing to the woman, he asked a friend who she was and was informed that she was Senora De Barancas, the widow of a Brazilian coffee planter and worth millions.

"Would you like to know her?" asked a gentleman sitting near Griffin.

"I certainly would," was the reply.

"I am a friend of hers, and if you will give me references I will be pleased to present you. She has only just arrived in the city and is unknown."

Griffin found a friend who vouched for him and was presented to Senora Barancas. He found confirmation of his belief that he had attracted her attention, because she had admired his appearance, in the reception she gave him, which was, to say the least, cordial. She lamented being in a great city where there was so much to enjoy with no one to enjoy it with except her business manager, the man who had introduced Griffin, and Griffin told her that it would give him great pleasure to make her stay pleasant. She told him that she had but a week in the city, for she had the misfortune, though a woman, to be burdened with the management of large interests.

Griffin devoted himself to the young widow for a week, at the end of which he prevailed upon her to remain another week. One morning Anne Redfield received a note from an attorney suggesting that a compromise might be effected in the matter of the condition in her father's will requiring her to marry Griffin. Anne referred the note to her attorney, who advised her to begin negotiations by offering Griffin $10,000 to refuse to marry her.

But before a reply to the offer was received David Corwin turned up and, taking Anne in his arms, announced that Griffin had been married the evening before.

Corwin was in a position to give his fiancee a lot of information as to the bride, for he had brought her from Rio de Janeiro himself, had arranged her meeting with Griffin—indeed, had arranged a trap for that gentleman which had been worked out very successfully. Senora Barancas was a hired adventuress, and David had agreed to remunerate her handsomely out of Anne's fortune if she could by marrying Griffin insure it to its rightful owner. The senora needed considerable funds to pose as the widow of a multimillionaire coffee planter, and David had been obliged to borrow the necessary amount.

The wedding was sudden, for the senora received a telegram (sent by David) that her interests needed her presence on her plantation, and Griffin concluded to snap her up without delay.

David and Anne did not wait for the courts to pronounce her an heiress before being married. But it was some time before she received her inheritance. Then all the expenses David had incurred in bringing out Senora Barancas were paid and the bride and groom began to enjoy their fortune.

OUR ALASKAN PARK

It Is Classed as One of World's Colossal Spectacles.

GRANDEUR OF THE SCENERY.

Mighty Mount McKinley, Most Lofty of All Our Country's Towering Peaks, Crowns the Titanic Glory of the Newest of Uncle Sam's Reservations.

The national park in Alaska which congress created in the spring of 1917 is one of the monster spectacles of the world. To say that Mount McKinley rises 20,300 feet above sea level and that it is the loftiest peak in America is to convey no idea whatever of its grandeur. There are several mountains in the Himalayas which materially exceed its height, one which rises more than 25,000 feet above sea level, and yet Mount McKinley to the observer is loftier than any of these.

The reason is that the greatest Himalayas are seen from valleys 7,000 to 10,000 feet in altitude, while Mount McKinley rises abruptly from valleys 3,000 feet and even less in altitude. The visitor to the Mount McKinley National park will look up more than 17,000 feet to the double peak, the upper 14,000 feet of which are covered with perpetual snow.

This enormous mass is the climax of the great Alaskan range which extends roughly east and west across southeast central Alaska, separating the vast northern inland from the more populated country whose shores are the gulf of Alaska. The range parallels the mighty Yukon many miles to its mouth.

The reservation contains 2,200 square miles. Its northern slopes, which overlook the Tanana watershed with its gold mining industry, are broad valleys inhabited by enormous herds of caribou. Its southern plateau is a perpetual winter wilderness through which glaciers of great length and enormous bulk flow into the valleys of the south. In this National park, which the railroad now building by government into the Alaskan interior will open to the public, America possesses Alpine scenery upon a titanic scale.

From the stormy south Mount McKinley is wholly inaccessible. But from the plains of the north valleys of easy grade lead one from another to its foot.

"It is an awe inspiring region of massive mountains and ice capped peaks," Belmore Browne of the Campfire club testified before the senate committee on territories. "The Piedmont plateau that follows the range affords a beautiful roadway direct to Mount McKinley, and when you reach the plateau all difficulties vanish and you see a view that is unique on this earth. You see the huge mountain line of perpetual snow, rising like a great wall on the southeast. You can ride a pony to where Mount McKinley rises 17,000 feet above you in a glittering wall of snow and ice. It is flanked by stupendous mountains, which make a wonderful setting for the monster."

North of the vast mountain, however, is a rolling country dotted with beautiful lakes and forests and inhabited by enormous herds of caribou. In fact, the special reason why congress set apart the region at this time was to conserve the wild animal life in advance of the invasion of hunters which the new government railroad will bring into Alaska, the road as projected running within twenty miles of this greatest of nature's spectacles.

Charles Sheldon of the Boone and Crockett club told the senate committee that several times he has counted as many as 500 mountain sheep in a single day of ordinary travel and that herds of caribou numbering from 1,200 to 1,500 are frequently seen.

As a game refuge and breeding ground the new National park conserves Alaskan game which elsewhere is rapidly disappearing. As in the case of the Yellowstone National park, the reservation serves as a perpetual center of game supply for large neighboring areas.

These animals do not greatly fear man, because they have never been hunted. One can approach the great herds of caribou. There are also many Alaskan bear of great size.

An extensive educational campaign has been inaugurated by the department of the interior for the information of the people concerning the hitherto unknown quality and extent of our national parks, of their scenic and recreational possessions, under which public interest in our national parks is growing with unanticipated speed, and public realization, interest and practical use is the condition as well as the object of national parks development. Public patronage of the parks has increased rapidly and steadily.

Co-operation in the public interest has been promoted between railroads and the government, between concessioners and park managements and between parks. Large private capital has been induced to enter several national parks for the enlargement and improvement of hotel and transportation service. Prices to the public have been decreased wherever possible.

Boudoir Gardening.

"How is your wife making out with those onions she is raising in a flowerpot?"

"They're drooping. Stirring the soil with a hairpin was all very well, but I don't think perfume from an atomizer is the sort of irrigation they need."—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

The Chester Inn

It Proved a Fitting Place For a Wedding

By ETHEL HOLMES

John Overaker, a member of the national guard of the state of New York, was engaged to be married to Helen Withers, who lived in Chicago. John was called to the colors with the expectation of being sent to the war at an early date. Most young men who are called upon to fight for their country and have sweethearts seem to prefer to go forth as married rather than as bachelors. At any rate, John Overaker proposed a wedding to his fiancee, and his proposition was acceded to by the lady.

Since Miss Withers lived a thousand miles from Mr. Overaker and he could not get a leave to be absent long enough to go to Chicago, be married and return, an agreement was made between the lovers that she should come to him instead of his going to her for the wedding. Miss Withers did not like the idea of a wedding in Mr. Overaker's home instead of her own, or in a hotel, or in the office of a justice of the peace. Just as she was about to start east she received a letter from a Mrs. Chester, an intimate friend living near New York, to whom she had written of her quandary, inviting her to be married from her house. Not having time before starting to write fully on the subject, Miss Withers scratched off a brief note to her lover asking him to meet her on a certain date at the location in which her friend lived, adding, "Come to the Chester."

It is unfortunate to be obliged to write hurried instructions for a meeting. Miss Withers' ink gave out as she finished the word "Chester," and there was none left for the "s." When Overaker read the note he inferred that the Chester was an inn. He was too busy with his military duties to read the missive over a second time. Indeed, it was difficult for him to do all he had to do before leaving to keep the appointment.

Overaker concluded to make the journey in civilian dress, though he took with him a uniform in which to be married. After spending an hour on a train he alighted at his station. A taxi chauffeur stepped up to him, and Overaker told him that he wished to go to "the Chester." The man knew of no such hotel; but, preferring not to confess his ignorance and having often seen a handsome residence which was known as the Chester place, he concluded to take the chances of its being the house his fare meant. The consequence was that Overaker was driven to the house where he was to meet his bride, thinking that he was going to a hotel.

A maid in black and white uniform opened the door for him, and in a few minutes a lady came in to receive him.

"I would like a room, if you please," he said. "I am to meet a lady from Chicago here, Miss Withers. Has she arrived?"

Now, the lady was Miss Withers' friend, Mrs. Chester. She had expected Miss Withers a few hours before Overaker arrived, but had received a telegram from some one—doubtless traveling with Miss Withers—stating that there had been a railway accident and consequent delay. The fact that the telegram made no mention of Miss Withers having escaped injury looked ominous. It occurred to Mrs. Chester that it would be better for the present to keep the matter from Mr. Overaker. His having mistaken her house for an inn facilitated her doing so.

"The lady has not yet arrived," she said, "but I have been advised of her coming."

"I am Lieutenant John Overaker. I am to meet Miss Withers here to be married to her. Did she mention this fact?"

"She did. She is to be married in this house."

"Do you know if she expects me to make the necessary preparations for the wedding?"

"I will do that for her."

"Indeed. Have you had any previous acquaintance with her?"

"Oh, yes; Miss Withers has been here a number of times."

"Very well. I suppose there is nothing for me to do, so with your permission I will go to my room. I have been so busy lately that I have had very little sleep. I may get a nap before my fiancee's arrival. It will freshen me."

This suited Mrs. Chester exactly, since she hoped to get news of Miss Withers while her fiance was resting. She led the way upstairs to a chamber, Overaker following. It did not look like a hotel bedroom, there being pictures on the walls and various articles that one does not find except in a private house, but Overaker was too much absorbed in his approaching nuptials, to say nothing of his military situation, to dwell upon the condition of his room, and after getting the dust off him he threw himself on the bed, closed his eyes and in a few minutes dropped asleep.

The next news Mrs. Chester received of Miss Withers was brought by the lady herself. She had not been injured in the railroad accident and was perfectly well. Mrs. Chester informed her of the arrival of her fiance; that he had mistaken the house for an inn; that she had permitted him to remain in error that she might better save him from anxiety concerning his expected bride.

Miss Withers went to Overaker's room, knocked gently at the door and, receiving no other reply than a snore, pushed the door open sufficiently to enable her to look in at her slumbering fiance. He seemed so dead tired and was resting so comfortably that she had not the heart to awaken him. Going downstairs to her friend, she said:

"I don't know but that we had better permit him to remain in ignorance of the fact that he is in a private house. He is very sensitive as to his treatment of others, and to know that he had spoken to my friend and hostess as a landlady would dampen his spirits for the wedding so soon to follow.'"

"I have been thinking of the same thing and quite agree with you," replied Mrs. Chester. "There will be no necessity to make an explanation. You can tell him about it at some future time."

At the end of two hours after Miss Withers' arrival the time appointed for the wedding arrived, and the butler was sent to Overaker's room to awaken him and announce Miss Withers' arrival. The announcement tended to arouse the lieutenant, who completed his toilet and, going down into the drawing room, embraced the girl who was soon to be his bride. She explained the delay in her arrival, and her presence uninjured did away with the shock that might otherwise have been expected.

"I think we need some refreshment," said Overaker and, stepping to an electric button, pushed it. The butler entered, and Overaker said:

"Bring us in a bite of anything you may have in the larder and let me have a wine card."

The butler had been coached and retired with a simple "Yes, sir." The bride to be was about to inform her lover that he was making a mistake, but changed her mind, concluding to let the matter take its course. There being some delay in serving the refreshment, Overaker rang the bell again, intending to give the butler a piece of his mind for being so long. But the man brought with him a tray, on which were a dainty luncheon and a bottle of wine.

"All right," said Overaker. "Where's the wine card?"

"The landlady says that it will be in the bill," was the reply.

Lieutenant Overaker and his bride to be enjoyed a very delicious luncheon together. Overaker, it must be admitted, was more in a condition to make merry than his fiancee, who was beginning to feel somewhat concerned as to the treatment the friend who was permitting the use of her house for the bridal was receiving at the hands of her lover. This belief that Mrs. Chester was a landlady and was to receive pay for what she was giving was becoming embarrassing. Something must be done to change the status.

"Don't you think," said Miss Withers, "that since Mrs. Chester has been so kind as to make the arrangements for our wedding we should invite her to lunch with us?"

"Certainly. Bring her in."

Miss Withers went out and returned with Mrs. Chester, who played her part as landlady admirably and treated the bride and groom with the respect due them from one of her station. Overaker drew the line between his landlady and an equal, much to her amusement, while his fiancee was a trifle embarrassed at the situation.

The wedding was set for 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Overaker was to leave to rejoin his regiment at 5, while the bride was to remain for a brief visit. When the parson arrived the household entered a room that had been properly decorated and awaited the coming of the bride and groom. The latter was somewhat surprised at the richness of the decorations and voted the landlady who had prepared them trump. But what surprised him more was to find her gowned and jeweled in a manner not befitting the landlady of the Chester inn. There was still another surprise—a necklace that only a person of wealth could afford, which Mrs. Chester gave the bride for a wedding present.

By this time Overaker began to suspect that something was wrong. But he did not communicate his suspicions to his bride. Shortly before leaving the house he said to her:

"I suppose I am in for some expense in this matter."

"Not at all," was the reply. "Since we could not be married in Chicago, where all the expense would have fallen on my father, the bills here are all paid, the same as if the wedding had taken place at my home."

"But"— began the groom and paused.

"But what?"

"How about the luncheon and wine I ordered?" stammered the lieutenant.

The bride broke into a laugh, called her friend, "the landlady," and all was explained to the groom.

His remark on being enlightened was indicative of the selfishness of man.

"If this gets out in the regiment I'm gone up."

"I am delighted," said Mrs. Chester, "with the outcome of this affair. When this morning I received the telegram announcing the accident I was filled with terror lest we should have something very different from a wedding. I had no idea in permitting Lieutenant Overaker to remain in error, turning the affair into a bit of fun. He should certainly thank me for saving him from several hours' bitter anxiety."

"And he has also to thank you," replied the lieutenant, "for a luncheon and a bottle of wine."

When Lieutenant Overaker returned from the bridal trip, which lasted but a few days, they went to Mrs. Chester's house. Since Overaker could not atone for mistaking her for a landlady by a gift he declared that he would name his first girl child for her.

HE GOT THE SNIPER.

An Incident of the Landing of Our Marines In Vera Cruz.

Uncle Sam's marines know how to handle a rifle; 50 per cent of the force are qualified, listed shots. There is a story about the occupation of Vera Cruz that tells of good shooting and a sure eye. Our bluejackets were marching up the street from the Plaza between rows of low two story houses. A well dressed Mexican gentleman, with a newspaper over his knee, was sitting on the balcony of his house, apparently intent on watching our sailors advance, but hidden under the paper he held a big revolver, and as our men went by he fired. The bullets were striking, but our officers could hardly suspect a well dressed Mexican, reading a paper and looking peacefully on from his own house, of being the sniper.

Dropping his paper, the Mexican went inside to reload. When he came out again on the balcony the glint of the gun caught the attention of Lieutenant Colonel Neville on horseback in the Plaza, a thousand or more yards away. Through his eight power field glass the colonel saw plainly the flash of the shots under the newspaper.

"Get him," he said, turning to his orderly.

The man raised his rifle, pressed the trigger—and the Mexican fell out of his chair.—Henry Reuterdahl in Youth's Companion.

WEIGHT OF THE FEET.

Greater When You Are Asleep Than When You Are Awake.

Your feet weigh more when you are asleep than when you are awake. At least that is the conclusion of a scientist who has experimented with the question. These tests were conducted in a most interesting manner. The subject was laid on a long plank, which was then placed upon a crosstree, seesaw fashion. The man upon the plank was balanced on this crosstree, and the plank remained at a level without any effort upon his part. But the moment that he went to sleep it began to incline downward at the end opposite his head.

This experiment was repeated with a number of persons belonging to both sexes, and in every case the result was the same. In no instance did the sleeper's head incline toward the ground.

This phenomenon is explained by the fact that the head is drained of surplus blood when a person is asleep, and the blood naturally flows toward the extremities of the sleeper. Immediately this makes the head lighter in weight, the difference being sufficient to upset the balance of a man resting in the position described.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Theodore Thomas Retort.

A characteristic story is told of one of the first rehearsals of the college choir (of the Cincinnati College of Music), at which Theodore Thomas has reprimanded some of the sopranos sharply for inattention. "He treats us as if we were members of his orchestra!" exclaimed an indignant singer to her next neighbor. Thomas overheard the remark and let it pass for the moment, but at the close of the rehearsal, as the performers were leaving the stage, he passed the lady in question and, turning to her, said very quietly, but with that biting sarcasm which those who knew him did not care to excite, "Madam, you will have to sing a great deal better than you do now before I shall treat you as I treat the members of my orchestra!"—Memoirs of Theodore Thomas.

Origin of the T Rail.

Robert Livingston Stevens sailed from New York to Liverpool before the advent of the ocean steamer. In those days the passage took two months, and Stevens passed many an hour, jackknife in one hand and a piece of wood in the other, brooding over a problem that had often worried him—how to run a railroad without stone stringers for tracks. He wanted to get an iron rail that would "hold" and would take the place of the thin strips fastened to the chair of the roadbed. Just before he reached England his whittling revealed to him the solution of his problem, and that solution took the form of a T rail with a broad base that could be applied direct to a solid wood support. That T rail is still in use on all the railways of the world.

Illiteracy In Spain.

In many villages and small towns in the interior of Spain no one knows how to read or write. There are in Spain 30,000 rural villages without schools of any kind and many thousands which can be reached only by a bridle path, there being no highroads or railway communication of any kind. Attendance at school is voluntary, not obligatory. Seventy-six per cent of the children in Spain are illiterate.

Another View of It.

"Tried to come between a man and his wife."

"Interfered in a family row?"

"Oh, no—tried to cross the street when each was coming toward him in an auto."—Florida Times-Union.

Ups and Downs.

"Did she appreciate the sacrifice?"

"No, she didn't; she threw me down."—Baltimore American.

One hears a lot these days of the government regulating the price of this, that and the other thing, but the fellow who is doing the selling somehow hasn't heard anything about it. Meanwhile the consumer is paying the bill, as usual.

In some parts of the State where national guard organizations are stationed there are rumblings of dissatisfaction among the enlisted men because of alleged favoritism displayed in the appointment of non-commissioned officers. The chief complaint seems to be that here and there newly enlisted men have been advanced over the heads of older and more experienced soldiers because of social or other influence. Favoritism should have no place in military organizations, certainly not in a time of war, for the general welfare and perhaps the lives of soldiers may be sacrificed because the best men were not placed in charge. One of the finest features of the life at West Point and Annapolis, the two great training schools for the army and navy, is that social influence cuts no figure and a man is advanced solely on his own merit. This is right and proper. No other principle should prevail in any military organization.

HAVING A GREAT ANCESTOR.

It Would Be All Right if So Many Outsiders Didn't Butt In.

In the American Magazine Sid says:

"A man tackled me for a job the other day. After enumerating his various accomplishments he wound up with a final claim that was intended to impress me with his importance once and for all. He said that he was a direct descendant of Bishop Ump-te-ump, the most learned man of his time in England. I asked what time that was, and he said that it was about 400 years ago. I told him that, allowing twenty-five years for each generation, he must be the sixteenth descendant. 'No; not the sixteenth,' he said, 'but the fifteenth.' 'All right,' I said, 'call it the fifteenth. Now, let's take a sheet of paper and see what your credentials really are. Let's see. You had one father and one mother, two grandfathers and two grandmothers, four great-grandfathers and four great-grandmothers, eight great-great-grandfathers and eight great-great-grandmothers, and so on.'

"Carrying the multiplication back to the fifteenth preceding generation, I showed that at the time the bishop lived my friend, the applicant, had exactly 32,768 ancestors. In other words, the bishop was only one of the 32,768 human beings who were his forbears at that time.

"'You have mentioned the bishop. But what about the other 32,767?' I asked. 'It seems to me that I ought to hear something about them if I am to judge you by the good blood which you say is in you. The bishop was all right. You are lucky to have as much of him in you as you have. But the bishop's stock has been considerably watered. I don't believe he would recognize you. What about the rest?'

"That is the trouble with this heredity game—if you carry it back very far. Old Mother Nature is a wonderful leveler. She won't let geniuses or boneheads breed in a straight line. To the weak she frequently gives a child of incredible talent—to keep the neighbors from getting abusive. To the brilliant and favored of the earth she often presents a choice piece of ivory in the shape of a dull son. Apparently the idea is to carry the race forward together and not to play favorites.

"Another feature of the scheme is that it keeps us all interested. Surprises abound on all sides. There is no telling where the next giant is coming from."

Fogs Are Valuable.

It has been discovered that fogs, especially ocean fogs, are valuable. Fogs are the principal fertilizers of the great bean fields of California. The fields are dry farmed. Rain means ruin. Yet moisture is a necessity. This is furnished in just the right degree by fogs.—Detroit Free Press.

He Told Her.

It was the first ball game she had ever attended.

"Why do they call that thing the plate?" was her forty-seventh question.

"Why—er—because that's where the drops from the pitcher are caught," he replied, his reason cracking under the strain.—Boston Transcript.

This Life.

There is only one way to get ready for immortality, and that is to love this life and live it as bravely and cheerfully and faithfully as we can.—Van Dyke.

"Before marriage," said the boatswain, "I used to hold Nancy on my lap two or three nights a week, but now—shiver my timbers—she sits on me all the time."

The friends of Squire John M. Keichline, of Bellefonte, are glad to see him out again as usual after his serious illness which made them think that he was about at the end of his earthly journey. He is a man of excellent habits and by good nursing he was able to pull through. He is still a little weak but he is able to talk politics.

The Bellefonte Chautauqua is now in full swing on the High School commons. The guarantors are jubilant over the fact that the finances are in better condition than in any previous year. This idea of having to cough up after it is over is not the most pleasant thing. Rev McLeod on behalf of the organization has given out the information that no courtesies are extended or complimentary tickets given out this season.

CARELESS LIVING.

The Awful Toll It Takes In Needlessly Shortened Careers.

There are more than 600,000 preventable deaths in the United States every year. There are a million and a half people lying on sick beds in the United States any day in the year who should not have been there. Such are the declarations made in the University of California Journal of Agriculture by the distinguished economist Irving Fisher, professor of political economy in Yale university.

"Human life is needlessly shortened at least fifteen years in the United States," declares Professor Fisher. "Moreover preventable diseases, even when not fatal, cripple the power to work and mar the joy of living. I venture the opinion," he says, "that the average man or woman in the United States is not doing half of the work nor having half of the joy of work of which the human being is capable."

While there is now a decreased loss of life from infection by the germ diseases, there is an increased loss of life after middle age from the degenerative diseases, such as hardening of the arteries or Bright's disease. Neglect of individual hygiene is declared by Professor Fisher the chief cause of this degeneration, and he urges every one to observe absolute cleanliness, to eat the proper foods, to work hard, but to play and rest and sleep, too, and to avoid worry.

"The secret of life and of happiness," says Professor Fisher, "seems to be in taking one's life and work cheerfully. Almost any one can assume this attitude if the proper desire is present."

CADETS OF CHAPULTEPEC.

Heroism of Gallant Little Band of Mexican Schoolboys.

The defense of Chapultepec during the war between the United States and Mexico in 1847 was almost as gallant as was the attack. In this attack forty-eight Mexican cadets, among others, lost their lives. The story is a stirring one.

For many years the celebrated castle of Chapultepec, where Montezuma held his barbaric court in the surrounding groves of cypress, where during nearly three centuries lived the successive viceroys of Spain and where Maximilian made his imperial home, has been the West Point of Mexico.

When General Scott had taken the place by storm and General Bravo had surrendered, a Mexican cadet only fifteen years old, seeing the flag of his country in peril, most of his comrades being already slain, climbed the flagstaff, tore the banner from its place, wound it around his body and slid down, intending to plunge over the precipice in order to save the colors from falling into the hands of the enemy.

That act of heroism being frustrated, the brave boy, with the banner still wrapped about him, fought until he was cut to pieces. Forty-eight of these schoolboys, ranging in age from fourteen to twenty years, lie buried in one grave at the foot of the hill. Year after year the cadets of Chapultepec strew flowers upon the grave.—Los Angeles Times.

Finger and Toe Nails.

Finger nails and toenails are only another phase of the development of man from the animal that originally walked on four feet. Animals that walk on all fours use the finger and toe coverings, which in man is the nail, to scratch in the ground, to attack enemies and to climb with, and our nails of the present day are what the development of man into a civilized being has changed them to. At that there are still uses for finger nails and toenails, or man in his changing to a higher plane would have found a way to develop away from them, says the "Book of Wonders." They are useful today in making our fingers and toes firm at the end and enable us to pick up things more easily. The time may come when man will have neither finger nails nor toenails.

Livingstone's House Preserved.

Measures have been taken by the British government to preserve the remains of Dr. David Livingstone's house at Kolobeng, or Kolobeng, Bechuanaland, and the graves in its vicinity. Here Dr. Livingstone lived as a missionary among the Bechuanas before setting out upon his great journeys of exploration. With the aid of the native chief, Sechele, the ruins of the house have been fenced and protected by a shed, and the site is to be kept clear of jungle and placed under the care of the headman of a neighboring village.—Scientific American.

Quick Returns.

At a Princeton reception a young sophomore said to the English poet Alfred Noyes:

"After I graduate I want to go into some business that promises quick returns."

"Try magazine writing, my boy," he said.—Detroit Free Press.

Tomatoes and Grapes.

An Italian grape grower accidentally discovered that the presence of tomato plants in his vineyard made short work of the phylloxera, with which his vines were infested. This insect destroys both the root and the stem of the grapevine.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS

Cecil Crafts, son of Fred Crafts, of Bellefonte, has joined the Repasz band of Williamsport which will finally land in France to cheer the boys on to victory.

Philip Waddle who had been visiting Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Twitmire left Bellefonte Friday for Sunbury to make a short visit with Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Twitmire.

September 1st, Labor Day, the P. O. S. of A., Centre county, will picnic at Hecla Park. A program is being prepared that will be pleasing and there will not be a minute of the day that something will not be going. It will be a basket picnic and everybody is cordially invited.

Mrs. Archibald Allison, who was taken ill recently while visiting friends in Sunbury, is improving and is now able to walk about in the family residence on Allegheny street. Her trouble resulted from something like a billious attack and it will not be long until she will be fully recovered.

One of the progressive business men in Bellefonte is Wagner Geiss who is a shipper of grain, hay, straw and oats. He had been in the poultry business but as chickens are now worth almost as much as a calf, for the present he is going a little slow along that line. He still runs a livery and is a transferer of trucks and other articles.

Leland Struble and bride, of Laramie, Wyoming, arrived in Bellefonte Saturday and became guests of Mr. Struble's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Struble, of Thomas street. Mrs. Struble was formerly Miss Ann Burnette a pleasing young lady of the north-west. After visiting in Bellefonte they will go to some of the prominent cities in the West.

Weaver Bros., the Bellefonte grocers, are running a series of pictures in their show window which is said to be the latest events of the world's war. They are true pictures taken from life and issued by the Associated Press and known as the Associate News Service. They are worth the time taken to stop and look at them.

Fred Leathers, of Howard, was in Bellefonte Tuesday, looking as if the world was giving him a good living notwithstanding the war clouds are hovering around us. He and his brothers are still in the real estate business and this week are having a big land sale in Oxford, Chester county. The Leather brothers are live wires.

Charles Morris, of Bellefonte, has been promoted to assistant to his father in managing the large lime business interests both here and other places where they have stone quarries and lime kilns. Charles has considerable experience in the manufacturing of lime and ought to be a great help to his father. This week he has been up in Micnigan on a business trip.

The Tyrone Herald says that fireman William J. Gates and family moved to Bellefonte where Mr. Gates will be the stoker on the Bellefonte shifter. Since coming to Tyrone two years ago, Mr. Gates and his family have won many friends who regret very much to hear that they have moved away. This is another instance where Tyrone loses and Bellefonte gains a good citizen.

William Larimer, who had been working in Altoona, getting things ready and selling out a big livery stable, is home. "Billy" is one of the finest horsemen in seven states but the automobile has sort of demoralized the business, and if he wants to get into the swim he will have to get a Packard or a Pierce-Arrow. He is a good man and you seldom see one like him out a job.

Last Thursday night, Mrs. Isaac Gray, of Halfmoon, was a visitor among friends in Bellefonte. The next morning she went to Tyrone where she met her daugher, Mrs. Glenn, wife of Rev. George Glenn, of Mt. Carmel. From there they went to Pittsburgh to spend a short time with Rudolph Glenn. After remaining there for a day or so they continued their journey to Cleveland, Ohio, and other places in the west.

The dance given in the Bush Arcade hall Tuesday evening in charge of Hassel Montgomery and Robert Walker was a success notwithstanding the extreme heat. There were visitors from Lock Haven, Williamsport, State College and Lewistown. Wright's Saxophone Orchestra, of Columbus, Ohio, furnished the music and it was of such a high character that the street below was lined with eager listeners until a late hour.

The very hard rain tore a part of the penstalk out of the mill of J. A. Kline. It is now being repaired by Frank Royer.

Orien Rish and a friend spent Sunday at Atlantic City.

A Surprise to a Young Man.

Monday John Nason, Jr., of Martha Furnace, arrived at his seventeenth birthday. His parents and a number of friends decided that they would not let the event pass without a celebration of some kind so they quietly sent out invitations for a birthday party. When the guests began to assemble the young man for a short time really was in a quandary to know what it meant but finally it dawned on him and, of course, he was highly delighted. Games were introduced and they had a fine time in general. Miss Emma Swoope and Miss Constance Gingery enlivened the occasion with instrumental music which was thoroughly enjoyed.

Those present were: Miss Dorothy Stevens, State College; Miss Alma Newman, Miss Kathryn Williams, Miss Ruth Gray, Julian; Miss Clara Williams, Christy Steele, Hope Steel, Ora Chronister, Martha; Elizabeth Williams, Julian; Bessie Marks, Port Matilda; Susie Holt, Julian: Susie Williams, Elizabeth Johnsonbaugh, Martha; Elizabeth Newman, Adelia Alexander, Julian; Martha Andrews, Nora Andrews, Belleview; Mary Nason, Martha; Jerome Andrews, Julian; Marion Gingery, Martha; Clarence Weaver, Milesburg; Lester Fink, Aroze Fink, Myron Fink, Teddy Fink, Curtis Robison, Martha; Paul Adams, Tyrone; Gilbert Williams, Martha; Gilbert Mattern, William Holt, Julian; Lundy Steele, Virgil Hatten, Ray Shower, Martha; Fred Andrew, Belleview; George Ross, Port Matilda; Harold Alexander, Julian; Orlando Nason, Martha; Hubert Williams, Martha; Bud Williams, Port Matilda.

The Go to Church Band.

In every church in Bellefonte there ought to be what is known as "The Go to Church Band." With the coming of the automobile there has been a shrinkage in the attendance of religious services, especially on Sunday. It is also reasonable to believe that Heaven, in the hereafter, will be minus some people in Bellefonte who think they are going there on flowery bed of ease.

Let that be as it may the Bellefonte United Brethren church has twenty-eight young people who have not missed a church service during the entire year. They are known as "The Go to Church Band." Friday Clyde Blackford, George Rhoads and Joe Thomas supplied the automobiles that took the band down to Fishing Creek for a little outing. On arriving George R. Meek surrendered his camp to the faithful young ladies and gentlemen and also furnished them with a supper and filled them up with lemonade and ice cream. Everybody enjoyed the day and the "band" takes oft their hat to Mr. Meek.

Foust to Watch Storage Houses.

Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust is planning a vigorous inspection of the cold storage warehouses this summer and fall because of the heavy deposits of food which are being made in them. The State cold storage act has been upheld in the courts and with other laws relative to food is being followed up by prosecuting cases.

Died in Hospital.

William Watson, who kept the police of Bellefonte busy for several years, died in the Williamsport hospital Wednesday morning at 5.30 o'clock after a short illness. He was married to Miss Minnie Rossman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ira Rossman, of Coleville, who survives him with three children. His mother resides at Niagara Falls.

Wednesday's Williamsport Sun says: "Watson was an inmate of the county jail. Tuesday afternoon he became ill and two physicians attended him. He was later sent to the hospital for attention and he died there. Watson was committed to the county jail last Saturday by Alderman E. W. Batzle on a charge of assault and battery, the charges being preferred by his wife. He was being held for court. It is understood that Watson originally came from Niagara Falls. He came to this city from Bellefonte and lived on Jefferson street. The body was sent to Niagara Falls. Watson was no stranger in this city, having served nine months under Sheriff Seitzer some years ago."

Death of Mrs. Joseph Stere.

Last Thursday Mrs. Joseph Stere, of Untonville, became ill suddenly and when a physician was called he diagnosed the case as blood poison. Instead of getting better she grew worse until Sunday morning when she passed away. Deceased was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Reynolds, of Bellefonte, and was born here 26 years ago. She was a bright and interesting young woman who had many friends both in Bellefonte and Unionville where she had been making her home since her marriage. She was a member of the Episcopal church and lived accordingly. She is survived by her parents, one sister, Miss Clair Reynolds, of Bellefonte, her husband and a young son, Morgan Stere who is one year and six months old. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock from the Episcopal church, Rev. Maynard officiating. Interment was made in the Union cemetery.

Mrs. Sarah Jane Farber Dead.

Sarah Jane Farber, wife of Martin Farber, deceased, died at the home of her daughter in State College on July 11th, 1917, aged 78 years eleven months and six days. She was the mother of six children, three of whom (Mrs. Henry Ellenberger, Mrs. Chas. Musser and Mrs. Geo. W. Williams) preceded her to the beyond, leaving the following to mourn her death: W. H. of Scotia; Mrs. Calvin Murtorff, of State College, and Mrs. Jay Woomer, of Juniata, and one brother, William Tate, of Centre Hall. Services were held Saturday morning, interment being made in Gatesburg cemetery.

Sworn into Service.

More than two score students from the leading colleges of the east, enrolled in the government's special store-keeping class at the Penusylvania State College, have been mustered into service. Under the direction of Professor Hugo Diemer, head of Penn State's industrial engineering department, the young men are spending six weeks mastering the details of accounting for supplies for the ordnance department of the quartermaster's corps. Those sworn in from Bellefonte were Ivan and Milon Walker, Fred Witmer and Earl S. Orr. Although some of these gentlemen are way down in the army draft they are liable to be called as soon as they complete the course.

Mr. Tuckerton

A Story of New York When the City Was Decorated For War

By ETHEL HOLMES

It was springtime, and New York city is very gay during the season when the trees are budding—not that trees bud in the metropolis except in the parks, and one would suppose that those who seek New York in spring would prefer the country. But this spring to which I refer was different from other springs. The United States had entered the world's war, and the national emblems which hitherto had floated solely from public buildings were springing into the sunlight like daffodils in a garden.

Fifth avenue, formerly lined with the dwellings of the rich, now occupied by costly buildings used for shops, was one blaze of banners. The flags of ten nations were mingled in profusion. Every day for as much as twenty hours the sidewalks of that busy street are lined with pedestrians, while from sunrise to sunset a policeman of the traffic squad stands at every corner to regulate the passing of vehicles from the cross street, whirling a sign, reminding one of a weather vane, on which are painted in large letters "Go" and "Stop." The autocrat of the street is obeyed implicitly by the thousands of chauffeurs who are passing back and forth, for woe betide the driver who dares dispute his orders!

Two young men, Archibald Potter and Charles Vandergriff, dressed in the height of fashion, were sauntering up this thronged thoroughfare, now taking off their hats to some damsel in a glittering automobile, now looking up at the mingling of banners floating from the houses, now pausing before a shop window to look at one of the many pictures of grim war used by venders of merchandise to attract attention. Presently they met a young man who also seemed absorbed in the display of bunting, autos, throngs and other objects of interest.

"Who is that fellow, Archie?" asked one of the young men referred to of the other. "I saw him last night at the club. I wonder who introduced him. He didn't seem to know any one there, but sat by himself reading a newspaper."

"Van Kleek 'put him up.' All I know about him is that he is an Englishman, a cockney, I believe, but what he's doing over here I don't know. Van Kleek introduced him to me, but I noticed that Van didn't give him any title, just said 'Mr. Tuckerton,' that's all."

"Van knows how to do a thing like that," the other suggested. "If he introduces one he wishes to be favorably received he introduces him as 'My especial friend, Mr. So-and-so.' If not the party is simply 'Mr. So-and-so,' which means, 'I don't vouch for him.'"

And the young men went on their way, admiring the scene afforded by what, at least at the time, was the most brilliant street in the world.

Let us leave them and follow Mr. Tuckerton. He was walking up the avenue, and his gaze was fixed principally on the flags. The sight of the ensign of one's country displayed in a foreign land is always pleasing, and when Mr. Tuckerton saw the Union Jack of England sandwiched between the tricolor of France and the Stars and Stripes or mingled with the flags of all the allies a smile hovered about his lips. Fifth avenue leads into Central park, and the stranger entered that inclosure, noting everything that appeared with the interest of one who saw it for the first time.

Englishmen are great walkers, and Mr. Tuckerton kept on his feet until it was time to return to his hotel for dinner. He dined alone and after dining went to his room, where he engaged in writing till the middle of the evening, when he ordered a taxicab and departed for the residence of Mrs. Worthington, one of New York's former aristocrats, when refinement stood for what is now represented by millions, but who was sufficiently well to do to maintain her position among the gilded aristocracy.

Mr. Tuckerton found a gathering at Mrs. Worthington's of New York's social representatives. On coming down from the robing room he met Van Kleek, who was a sort of go-between connecting Mrs. Worthington and the money autocrats of New York. Van Kleek and the Englishman went together to the hostess to salute her. The lady received Mr. Van Kleek with a familiar nod, but greeted Tuckerton as she would any other guest.

There are many persons in fashionable New York society who have passed through an experience of social climbing that has given them a full appreciation of the position to which they have attained. This class is naturally jealous of any one attaining easily that which they themselves have been at so much pains to secure. No one at Mrs. Worthington's reception knew Mr. Tuckerton or that he was an Englishman who did not intend to make his home in America. They merely noted the fact that an unknown person was admitted where they belonged, he not having either inherited his ticket or climbed the ladder at the top round of which it was to be obtained. Mrs. Worthington did not introduce her British guests. Van Kleek chatted with Tuckerton for some time and seemed interested in his talk, but this was the only attention he received during the evening.

Finally Mr. Tuckerton espied a young lady sitting by herself who seemed as much out of place among the golden throng as he was himself. He noticed that, though she was dressed in exquisite taste, there was not an expensive article in her makeup. Whether Tuckerton took pity on her on account of her being left alone or whether he saw something in her different from the glittering tinsel that made up the assembly, he was sufficiently interested in her to ask Van Kleek about her. Van Kleek said that she was the granddaughter of one who had been prominent in New York society half a century before. The family had lost their means, but had recently won a lawsuit that had returned to them enough of their property to enable them to enter the social circle. Miss Warren had essayed to claim the social position to which she was entitled by birth, but her place there had been filled, and she must begin at the bottom of the ladder and climb like others.

Tuckerton asked Van Kleek for an introduction to the young lady, and Van Kleek at once granted the request.

The rest of the evening Mr. Tuckerton spent with Miss Warren. No one paid the slightest attention to them; at least no one appeared to consider them, though there was something about them that caused a certain unexpressed interest. Mr. Tuckerton was not exactly like other men, and Miss Warren had received that which the other guests could not buy with money—the stamp of gentility to which one must be born and can never attain.

But this undercurrent of interest did not in the least tend to break down the barrier that separated the couple from the others. No one ventured to show either of them the least attention. Tuckerton could have made a request to be introduced to any of them. Miss Warren as a woman did not have the same privilege. But she was the only person to whom he asked to be introduced during the evening.

This man and woman, then, spent the evening together and seemed to be entirely absorbed in the conversation between them that had started after their introduction. At first their talk appeared to be merely the formal commonplace remarks that come with the introduction of well bred strangers, but gradually it took on an air of interest that apparently riveted the attention of both and finally made them oblivious to their surroundings. By the time the evening was over and adieus were bidden Mr. Tuckerton and Miss Warren seemed like old friends.

A few days after Mrs. Worthington's reception the commission sent over by the English government visited New York and was received by the city officials and by throngs of citizens. When the cavalcade passed up between the multitude of banners that lined Fifth avenue the two men who have been mentioned as strolling on the street shortly before viewed it from a window in a club facing the street.

"By Jove!" exclaimed Vandergriff suddenly.

"What's the matter?" queried Potter.

"Do you see that fellow riding in that carriage—the fourth from the end?"

"Why, he's the chap we met on foot the other day—the man Van Kleek put up and wouldn't vouch for."

"What's he doing in that crowd, do you suppose?"

"I don't know. I'll find out." And he asked one of the lookers-on about it.

"That's the Marquis of Annesley, heir to the dukedom of Abbington. He came over with the commission incognito, or, rather, under his untitled name of Tuckerton."

"Great Scott! Is he a member of the commission?"

"I believe not officially, but he is one of the principal persons in the party."

Many of those who had been guests at Mrs. Worthington's reception saw the man they had ignored riding up Fifth avenue on that gala day and learned for the first time who he was. And there was gnashing of teeth among them.

One young woman viewed the procession from an upper window, Miss Warren, who had nothing to learn of Mr. Tuckerton's identity. He had visited her at her home and had not sought to keep his rank from her. The reason for his doing so to others was that he dreaded being lionized on account of being a nobleman. The only persons who knew of his identity were Mr. Van Kleek and Mrs. Worthington, and he had pledged them not to reveal it. This was the reason why Van Kleek had not vouched for him and why Mrs. Worthington had not shown him any especial attention at her function and had not introduced him to her guests.

The appearance of the marquis in the procession on the day the British commission was received by the city of New York revealed his identity to the elite of New York, for there were many questions as to who was the distinguished looking man who rode in the fourth vehicle from the end of the procession.

Invitations poured in on him by scores, and he was besieged by persons to secure his attendance at social functions. But he declined them all on the ground that he was in America on important business and it would not be possible for him to make a digression socially.

There were many young women who had millions to pay for the nobleman's hand, and when before he left America it was known that Miss Warren had received it without price there was a wailing and a gnashing of teeth among them. It was reported that the marquis said that there had been a real aristocracy in New York many years ago, and he was proud to have won one of the survivors.

USING UP THE HOG

Not Even a Hair of Him Is Wasted by the Big Packers.

GOOD PROFIT IN THE OFFAL.

It Yields as Great a Financial Return as Do the Main Food Products of the Carcass—How the Various Parts of the Animal Are Utilized.

There is a use for everything that is removed from a hog. After years of experimenting packers have reduced their business to such a system that they realize as much profit from the offal as they do from the main carcass.

The meat of a hog is from 70 to 80 per cent of the live weight. The 20 to 30 per cent that is classed as offal makes the money for the packers. Exclusive of condemnations by government inspectors, about 17 per cent of each carcass is lost at various stages of dressing and by evaporation in processing and curing, so that really only about 60 per cent actually goes into cuts to be retailed to the consumer. The various cuts—hams, bacon, loins, spareribs and pork sides—are the main products.

Among the edible byproducts is pepsin, which is derived from the stomach of the hog. The liver is used for food as it is taken from the body, and it is also made into liver sausage. Brains are prepared in many ways. Tongues find their way into the making of canned and pickled meats. Hearts are used in sausage.

Tails, snouts and ears are rich in gelatin or glue, but most of them are sold for boiling with kraut and other vegetables and are much in favor with lovers of boiled meals. Kidneys enter into the fresh meat trade or when the supply is too large are frozen or canned.

Neutral is a specially prepared lard largely used abroad, and in this country an important ingredient in the manufacture of oleomargarine. Lard proper is not commonly called a byproduct of the hog; it is one of the primary products. About 15 per cent of the average hog goes into the making of lard. The demand for lard has increased greatly during the past few years. It is now used commonly in cooking in place of butter. Part of the lard is further processed into lard oil and stearine, the former used as a lubricant and for illuminating purposes, the latter entering into the manufacture of lard compounds, chewing gum, soft candies, fancy toilet soaps and other toilet preparations.

Small quantities of blood are used in the making of blood puddings, but most of it is dried and ground into blood meal, a popular ration with poultry raisers as well as a feed for calves that are being fed on skimmilk.

Stomachs are used as sausage containers, the lining first being removed and used as a source of pepsin. The "black" or curly intestines of the hog are carefully cleaned, processed and made into chitterlings, an inexpensive food that is fried like oysters, much in favor with colored people.

Seven per cent of the weight of the hog is represented in nonedible byproducts in the raw state, which are afterward manufactured into glue, soap glycerin, blood meal, tankage, curled hair and fertilizer. In the finished state these products represent about 4½ per cent of the hog's weight, the balance being lost in evaporation.

The rinds from skinned hams and bacon, as well as the back skin of the hog, are saved. Pigskin is used in athletic goods.

Hair enters into many lines of manufacture. A large part is used in the making of brushes, and the finer the bristle the higher priced brush is produced. It is also curled and used for upholstering.

The waste waters are evaporated to a thick brown wax known as "stick" because of its adhesive properties. It is used in the manufacture of fertilizer as it has a high nitrogen content.

Bones are used in making phosphate for baking powder and other compounds. They are also ground into poultry feed, and a large tonnage finds its way into the fertilizer trade. Bones are also burned for charcoal for use in the purification of sirups in the manufacture of sugar. Bone ash is used in making crucibles for glassmaking and metal refining.

Tankage is a bone and tissue substance that is taken from the tanks after the different parts are rendered for grease. It is used chiefly in stock and poultry feed.—Joseph M. Carroll in Country Gentleman.

The Ticket

It Led to Complications

By AGNES G. BROGAN

There was the girl again! Billy Thornton frowned at her sudden entrance into the car—not that there was anything about the fresh, interested countenance to call forth a masculine frown. Jane Wilder was exactly the opposite kind of girl. But Billy never had met her and was more anxious to meet her than for anything else in the world, and, though she was always appearing in most unexpected places in a delightfully disturbing manner, still she, the ideal, remained as far distant as some beautiful, wonderful star.

"How," mused Billy to himself—"how in the world could the proper meeting be brought about?" Sometimes he was pleased to fancy a responsive interest in the girl's glance of quickly veiled recognition in their several encounters. "How—oh, how?"

"So glad to see you, dearie," murmured an old lady, bending over his divinity from the seat behind. "You are on your way to the child welfare meeting, of course. How busy you keep yourself with everything of an uplifting nature! I don't see how you do it."

The girl laughed as she turned around. Billy's heart thumped in sympathy with the clear joyousness of the sound. Never had he heard her voice or laugh before, and in nothing was she disappointing. Recklessly he allowed the windows of his office, where Braydon was waiting to see him upon an important commission, to fade into distance. He would sit here in this seat until the girl left the car.

"Oh, I am not voluntarily busy," she answered the old lady, "just drawn into the work by my friends. Meetings are all this week, you know—evenings for the men. We must interest voters. Lillis is one of the ushers, so it was she who solicited my aid, the dean of our old college being tonight's speaker."

"I would like to go," the old lady responded. Eagerly the girl fumbled in her purse. "So sorry," she said at length. "I have no more tickets, and admission is all by ticket invitation."

She jumped to her feet. "My corner!" she cried. "Goodby, Mrs. West." It was then that Billy heard the coveted name.

"Goodby, Jane Wilder," said the old lady.

"'Jane Wilder.'" Mentally he echoed the name. "It was like her somehow." To him it sounded quaint and sweet. He was planning as he brushed through the crowd in the streets to obtain tickets in some manner for that evening's "welfare" meeting. It would be in the auditorium, of course, and she had said by invitation only. He remembered reading an account of the affair in the papers. Former pupils of the college represented by the speaker were to act as ushers. Surely one might speak to an usher, and surely one might select one's particular usher. Billy began to whistle.

The low but merry tune seemed to annoy rather than cheer the tall young man who swung impatiently about in Billy's pet office chair.

"Great Scott," Braydon ejaculated in greeting, "you come in more than thirty minutes late and happy as a May day! I went without my own lunch in order to get over here on time, while you"—

"Say," remarked Billy absently, "where can a fellow get tickets for tonight's child welfare meeting?"

Braydon's feet came to the floor with a bang. "What's the matter with you, Thornton?" he asked.

Billy waved the question impatiently aside. "Where can I get them?" he insisted.

"How the dickens do I know?" the man replied. Suddenly he glanced at Billy's eager face. "Why this unusual interest in a strange cause?" he asked.

Deliberately Billy seated himself in an opposite chair. "There is a girl," he answered seriously, "whom I am very anxious to meet. She will be there tonight. Among that old college crowd we must have mutual acquaintances. If you can direct me to any one who might possibly have a spare ticket of invitation I'd be obliged. That's all."

His friend considered. "Why, there's Jack Maynard," he said. "His wife was a student at that college. I'll speak to him. Before we get down to business, what's the name of this girl, Billy? Might know her myself."

Thornton's eyes took on their previous reminiscent gleam. "Wilder," he repeated softly—"Jane Wilder."

In the desperate hope of hearing from Jack Maynard he lingered in the office long past closing time and at last was rewarded by the appearance of a messenger bearing an envelope marked, with the date, "Ticket to auditorium meeting." Billy's sinking spirits soared to their highest level. That very evening he should see her again at least—that evening. There was not much time for dinner. The auditorium would be crowded.

For a moment as he waited in the entrance Billy's eyes roved excitedly among the white gowned tiers of ushers. Then at length he spied her. She was even more charming with her uncovered golden head than in the fetching hats of his remembrance, and—yes, she was coming slowly toward him. A rather stout woman usher put out her hand.

"Ticket, please," she demanded. But Billy smiled in the direction of the oncoming little figure.

"Waiting," he said. Miss Jane Wilder's gaze was entirely impersonal. Silently she accepted and read his ticket; then "Oh!" she breathed. Vaguely troubled, he glanced down at the golden head. Surprise, disappointment—what was it that showed for a moment in the eyes upraised to his?

"This way," she said, and Billy followed her down the aisle. But at the choice seat designated the stout overseeing usher reappeared.

"Must be some mistake," she argued loudly. "This section reserved for ushers and their husbands only. Let me see your ticket." Billy was about to apologize and withdraw—other fortunate possessors of nearby seats interestedly watched the outcome—when his director's voice sounded distinctly.

"It's all right, Mrs. Sayles," she said. "The ticket reads, 'Mr. and Mrs. Jack Maynard.' Mrs. Maynard is not here this evening, but she ushered at this afternoon's meeting."

Before Billy could collect his senses, before he could deny to the one girl in all the world this fatal imputation, the two white clad women, whispering, moved away together. And to this end had his scheming led him. The girl whose love he craved was now, through a senseless mistake, removed from him forever. Henceforth he was in her eyes but the wedded husband of a certain Mrs. Jack Maynard. Why hadn't he glanced at the confounded ticket instead of rushing with it like a fool?

Despairingly Billy looked about, after the oration, if here he might still find one friend, perhaps also of her acquaintance, but all were strangers, not one familiar face. Broodingly he made his way to the door. Out in the vestibule he lingered to throw on his coat, and presently from a merry, chattering throng she made her way to him.

The wonder of her sudden presence there at his side, the smile that was unmistakably for him, held him for the moment speechless.

"I hope the evening has been a pleasant one," she said and held out her hand. Billy saw that the hand was extending to him a small white envelope and took it. Then his dream abruptly ended.

"A ticket for the mothers' meeting tomorrow, Mr. Maynard," she said. "Please give it to your wife."

Before his denying lips could even form a reply she had vanished. It was a decidedly grouchy Billy Thornton whom his tall friend found in the office the next day.

"Enjoy the uplift meeting?" Braydon casually inquired.

"The deuce!" answered Billy.

"As to that Miss Wilder," the friend went on. "Happen to know people who in turn know her. Take you over to meet her if you like."

Billy's grouch evaporated. "Tonight?" he asked crisply.

"Tonight," replied Braydon.

Billy banged down the cover of his desk in a spirit of joyful anticipation. In ten minutes he would explain all to her. And after that—well, if he didn't win out in the old game of love it would not be because with all his heart and soul he had not tried. He wished that Braydon would refrain from entering into that old business problem on the way to the house where he was to meet her. He wanted to go over in his mind the things that he would say.

Before he realized it they were in the brilliantly lighted reception room and he was bowing before a sweet faced woman presented as Mrs. Jack Maynard, who immediately, taking Billy in charge, led him to a girlish figure at the farther end of the room.

"Miss Wilder," she announced rather absently and hurried back to his friend. The "one girl" smiled up at him.

"We are not quite strangers," she said, "but I am afraid you forgot to give the ticket to Mrs. Maynard. She was absent, I noticed, from the afternoon meeting, and you"—

"Miss Wilder"—it was the interrupting voice of Braydon—"come here just a moment, please, to settle a dispute."

Billy savagely ground his heel on the rug as others came to claim the girl's attention, keeping her from him. When was this silly affair to be straightened? Where was the real Jack Maynard?

Interminably the evening dragged and no opportunity for a further word with the girl of his dreams. In her eyes he was now no doubt just the uninteresting husband of her hostess while in his eyes—Billy rapturously caught his breath as he looked at her—she grew each moment fairer.

In sudden determination he crossed to where she sat before the piano.

"I want to talk to you," he said.

The girl's fingers rested upon the keys. Half turning, she looked up at him.

"I—I'm not Jack Maynard," Billy blurted out desperately, "and I'm not married. It was a confounded—I beg your pardon—only a borrowed ticket."

The laughing challenge of her eyes gave him sudden courage. "I have wanted—no, that's not the word—I have desired above all things for months to meet you," he went on, then paused. His eyes were saying more. "My name is Thornton," he ended abruptly—"William Thornton."

Miss Jane Wilder arose and stood before him. "I know it," she said quietly, "and I knew it all along. Back there at church that day a friend pointed you out to me. Yesterday when Jack Maynard asked for a ticket for you to the meeting it was I who suggested that he lend you his." She laughed softly. "It was wicked of me to pretend," she admitted—"wicked but—it did not take you so long to bring this"—she paused and held out her hand—"about."

Fervently Billy grasped the proffered hand; fervently he bent to look down into the girl's face. Then deep and happily he sighed. "At last!" breathed Billy.

THE PLAY OF "HAMLET."

Does It Always Make the Dane and the Gravedigger Enemies?

In his "Notes on Shakespeare's Workmanship" Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch says that "Hamlet" was written "not for an audience of Goethes and Coleridges, but for an audience of ordinary men and women," and, speaking of its popularity, he says that to this day a traveling company of [British?] actors, thrown on their beam ends for lack of money, having acted this or that to empty houses, always as a last resort advertise "Hamlet." * * * When an actor takes a benefit, "Hamlet" is the piece most commonly chosen. * * * But why does the gentleman who enacts the first gravedigger also choose "Hamlet" for his benefit night?

I was once assisting at a dress rehearsal of "Hamlet" when the first gravedigger came off the stage in a passion. In the greenroom it exploded. "Why," he wished to know, "should I be treated like a dog by this conceited fool?"—meaning our Hamlet, of course. "His temper gets viler at every rehearsal. Surely, after airing his vanity through four acts, he might be quiet while I have my little say!"

"Bless you, sir," answered an old dresser, "it's always like that. In these forty years I've helped dress, I dare say, all that number of Hamlets, and Hamlet and the First Gravedigger always fall out. It's a regular thing. I've known 'em to come to blows. Hamlet and first gravedigger! When you've said that you've said oil and vinegar."

KEEPING TREES IN HEALTH.

Roots and Crowns Must Be Made to Balance Properly.

Well nourished, healthy trees are less liable to the attacks of insects than those that for lack of sufficient plant food are making a slow and uncertain growth. To keep trees well fertilized and in a vigorous condition is the best possible insurance against insect depredations and all forms of disease.

A soil which supplies abundant nutriment and moisture is the prime requisite for successful tree culture. In the forest natural conditions are favorable in this respect, but in the open field or town they are frequently quite the reverse. The roots are robbed of the required moisture and air by heavy sod or pavements. To grow trees under such conditions requires scientific care in the way of fertilizing and pruning to maintain proper balance between the roots and the crown or top.

If the nourishment received by the roots is scanty the judicious thinning out of the branches of a tree has much the same effect as soil improvement. A heavy top cannot be adequately nourished by a stinted root growth, and if not pruned the effect is quickly indicated by dying branches here and there, nature's way of maintaining the right balance between root and crown. It is better for the tree to forestall nature in this respect by timely and careful pruning. Dead branches are not only unsightly, but the scars thus left are slow to heal and invite disease and decay.—Tree Talk.

Caroline Herschel.

Among distinguished women who have helped to shed light upon abstruse subjects was Caroline Lucretia Herschel, the noted astronomer. She was the daughter of a musician of Hanover. Her early education was designed to lead to a musical career. She accompanied her brother, William—afterward the illustrious Sir William Herschel—to England. Brother and sister soon turned their attention to astronomy, and in 1798 Caroline published a "Catalogue of Stars." Until Sir William died in 1822 she was content for the most part to be known only as his assistant, but later she engaged in many original and independent investigations. She devoted special attention to the discovery of comets, and claimed priority in the discovery of at least five.

No Hurry

The telephone bell rang with anxious persistence. The doctor answered the call.

"Yes?" he said.

"Oh, doctor," said a worried voice, "something seems to have happened to my wife. Her mouth seems set, and she can't say a word!"

"Why, she may have lockjaw," said the medical man.

"Do you think so? Well, if you are up this way some time next week I wish you would step in and see what you can do for her."—Harper's Magazine.

War Endings.

No great war of modern times has ended during the winter months, nor, with the exception of the Russo-Japanese war, has any begun then. For a century all wars have begun in the spring, summer or early autumn and ended between March and August.—Argonaut.

Skates on the Flour Barrel.

If your flour barrel is hard to get at nail a discarded roller skate on each side of the bottom of the barrel. With the aid of these and a handle or knob fastened on the front of the barrel you will have no further difficulty in moving it out when necessary.

Real Fighting.

"Well, have you been fixing your fences?"

"Been digging trenches," declared Congressman Flubdub. "I'm in for a real fight."—Kansas City Journal.

A Stamp Licking Nation.

Stamp licking may soon rank with golf as an expensive pastime if the revenue bill now before the Senate passes in its present form. At least that's the way one statistics lover looks at it.

The bill calls for stamps for bank checks, stamps for steamship tickets, stamps for voting proxies, or stock certificates, and every known form of legal document. Altogether, says the statistical expert, there will be enough stamps to require 16,666,666 hours of time for the simple process of licking them. That would take 5,555 men ten hours a day for a year to lick all the stamps. At $5 a day they would consume $8,333,333 worth of time.

This estimate seems to consider only the licking. The labor of pressing the stamps on the documents would add not an inconsiderable amount to the total. And the revenue to be yielded by all this stamp licking will be only $30,000,000.

It's a painful outlook to be sure, unless perhaps it diverts the public from the older pastime of gum-chewing.

It's No Joke.

There are people in Bellefonte who are foolish enough to believe that this war is nothing but a huge joke, and that those who have enlisted are those who have been drafted are nothing more than tin soldiers. We have come to this conclusion from the frivolous manner some of the boys have been accosted on the street. Instead of the frivolity there should be the greatest respect shown for those who really have taken their life in their hands to save this country from losing its democratic principles. When the boys get into the trenches in France and the grewsome news reaches here of bloodshed and disaster these people will begin to put on their thinking cap. It is all right, meet the boys and have a little fun but don't carry it to a point where it becomes almost insulting. Most of the fun making is the result of thoughtlessness on the part of those who do not need to take up arms. This war is a stern reality and the American people must look upon it as such.

"Dry" Law Hits Congress.

The "bone-dry" army and navy demanded by congress has "come home to haunt" senators and representative who spend their leisure time at the Army and Navy club at Washington, D. C. The club has gone "dry." The bar has been removed and the members of congress are "fellow sufferers" with men in the service.

By orders of the secretaries of war and the navy, officers must wear their uniforms at all times. By act of congress men in uniform cannot get a drink. The result has been that while scores of members of congress enjoyed the "privileges of the bar" at the Army and Navy club, those who established the club did not.

Effective Monday, the army and navy officers refused to maintain a bar at the club for the benefit of members of congress.

German Casualties.

The German casualties reported in the German official lists during June but not as having occurred in June, are given out by the war office as follows:

Killed, and died of wounds 28,819.
Died of sickness 3,215.
Prisoners and missing 38,606.
Wounded 95,906.

The totals of the German official lists since the war began are as follows:

Killed or died of wounds 1,032,800.
Died of sickness 72,960.
Prisoners and missing 591,966.
Wounded 2,825,581.

The naval and colonial casualties are not included.

May Care for Pupils' Teeth and Eyes.

Two amendments to the school code were among the nine Senate bills approved by Governor Brumbaugh last Tuesday. One provides that school districts may provide for the care of defective eyes and teeth of all their pupils, and the other provides for taking a census of a district when added to another district and there is uncertainty about the school population. The court is to name the enumerator.

Four Young Men Become Volunteers.

Four more volunteers were received as a result of the last drive for army recruits made in front of the Philipsburg post office on Friday evening. The young men who enlisted and were accepted by Corporal A. C. Waring were James I. Hazzard, John A. Dennis, Carl J. Swartz and Michael E. Berish. The young men went at once to Fort Slocum for final examination and training.

New Tax on Dogs $2 and $4.

The Governor signed the Lohl sheep dog bill, last week, which was regarded as the most drastic step ever taken in this state for the protection of sheep. The measure taxes male dogs $2 and female $4, and that applies to strictly rural communities. All unlicensed dogs running at large are to be killed on sight Dogs of sufficient size to run sheep mus be locked up at night.

Fire at Altoona.

Shortly before 5 o'clock last Saturday afternoon a vicious electric storm passed over Altoona doing widespread damage. Both the High School building and City Hall were struck by lightning causing some fire and it was by hard work they were saved from total destruction.

His Legacy

It Was Not Property

By AGNES G. BROGAN

The December afternoon was drawing to a close when John Gordon decided suddenly to go out to the house. All day the sun had been shining, but now coming shadows warned him that he had not much time to spare. He had postponed the ordeal as long as he could, for surely it would be an ordeal to spend precious time plugging along on a suburban trolley, transferring at some wayside country station and then, maybe, if no vehicle could be obtained, walking the rest of the way uphill.

This much he knew: The house was situated upon the top of the hill, the village straggling at its foot. But why James Laidlaw, deceased, had seen fit to leave the house with its belongings to John Gordon's own mother he could not understand. That the eccentric old man had been a youthful friend he had often heard, and now that his mother had also passed into the great beyond John Gordon must accept the property as the next of kin and incidentally go out to look it over.

The trolley was late, of course, and he restlessly strode up and down the platform. This trip was a nuisance and no doubt the property scarce worth the trouble. Time was when John Gordon had not been so indifferent to country homes or legacies.

He was weary of superficiality, absorbed and buried in business. The second wait, at the tiny cross country station, was doubly annoying, and, his destination finally reached, no vehicle was obtainable. In fact, John Gordon was the only passenger to leave the train at Elmhurst. The station agent laconically directed him "hillward," and, turning up his greatcoat collar, he bent his face to the wind.

He had not gone a dozen yards when the sudden storm was on him. Snow, heavy, yet as thick as down, fell in swirling clouds. But the key was in his pocket. He had come thus far on his troublesome journey, and he would not turn back. A few moments before the storm had descended he had glimpsed the house, high and solitary upon its hill. It seemed a place not to be lightly despised. He muttered an imprecation as the wind of the height battled him back; but, after all, the distance was not so great as it seemed, and he stood breathless upon the deserted front porch.

He laughed a little at the incongruity of the situation as he fitted the key into the lock. The heavy snow had changed the daylight to gloaming, and he determined to go through the house as quickly as possible, returning to town by the next train. With difficulty the unused door gratingly opened, and Gordon found himself in a wide, silent, ghostly hall, ghostly because of the white draped furniture. Evidently nothing had been disturbed, awaiting his coming and delayed settlement of the estate. He shivered even in his greatcoat as he hastily inspected the rooms upon either side of the hall, then ran upstairs. Here the almost impenetrable darkness caused him to grope to the window, vainly trying to peer through the pane. The snowstorm had turned into a blizzard, hiding the lights of the village below. To start back now would be folly; to stay in this deadly vault of a house, worse.

The telephone, of course, was disconnected, but even if available what person would venture to come to his assistance up through this blinding, cutting storm? John Gordon sank back upon a damp couch to smoke and think things over; useless in this darkness to continue his investigation of the house. A drowsiness came over him, and in real terror lest he should sleep in the freezing atmosphere he moved cautiously toward the hall. Here another stairway confronted him. There had been a tower room, he remembered. Perhaps from there he might be able to see the direction of the lights below.

Numbed with cold, he reached the upper landing, then paused, blinking his eyes at a spark of light which, like a firefly, came for a moment but to disappear. Surely this was an afternoon of uncanny adventure. Again the spark shone high upon the wall.

"Who is there?" called John Gordon and immediately smiled at the nervous folly of his own question. With coldly shaking fingers he lighted and steadied a match, then another.

"Jove!" he exclaimed and stood gaping into the darkness. High upon the opposite wall, on a ledge of what seemed to be a bookcase, dangled the hide of a white polar bear. It took a third match to satisfy him that the beast's gaping jaws and glaring eyes were artificial. Then directly from behind the white shaggy head a small electric torch was leveled at him.

"Oh!" breathed a relieved feminine voice. "You are the real estate agent, of course. I did have such a scare."

John Gordon was still too astonished to speak.

"You have matches," continued the girlish voice. "Please, will you light the gas?"

"Gas?" queried the man stupidly.

"Certainly." Her tone was impatient. "I know you suggested bringing matches along when you phoned the meter was in, but I forgot. Please hurry."

Mechanically John Gordon sought and found a chandelier. The tower room was flooded with light. He rubbed his eyes and looked again. Ensconced in the white bear skin upon the very top of the bookcase ledge was seated a girl! And such a girl! Her eyes sparkled back as though the numbing cold, the impossible situation, were all part of a joyous adventure.

"I've been nearly frozen to death, and so I confiscated the bear rug," she explained. "You promised over the phone to call for me here at 5, but I suppose the sudden storm detained you. I was up on the ladder, going over the books, when it left me in darkness. There was nothing else to do, so I sat where I was, reading by the light of my torch. Those wonderful old books are interesting enough to make one forget everything. Now," she ended abruptly, "will it be possible for us to go back?"

"I am afraid not yet," John Gorden answered perplexedly.

With a quick motion the girl discarded the fur rug and came nimbly down the bookcase ladder.

"We will light the grate, then," she said and put out her hand for a match. As the fire curled about the gas logs he came eagerly toward the warmth, bending with wrinkled brows to study the face of the girl. Unconscious of his puzzled and admiring scrutiny, she removed her hat, the firelight glinting upon the soft waves of her hair. She seemed to be an unusual young person of decided action.

"Now," she said, "as we will be obliged to remain here for a time, we can talk things over. I've brought a little lunch." Deftly she was arranging sandwiches upon a box cover.

"Have one?" she smiled.

John Gordon smiled too. Dreaming or waking, real or unreal, the discouraging adventure of an hour ago had turned, fairy-like, to one of pleasure. "Thank you," he replied. "And now may I ask just how you come to be here"—he waved an arm about—"here in the tower room of this deserted ghostly old house?"

The girl's eyes opened wide. "Why I told you," she said, "I came after the books."

"Books?" It seemed the lawyer could now only repeat, parrot-like, her words.

She nodded impatiently. "But I had no idea there were so many. It will be impossible to remove them at present. You gave me no idea of their number or value over the phone. Whatever"—she gazed dreamily into the fire—"possessed Uncle Laidlaw to leave his books to father and the house to that rich lawyer's mother? Now, if he'd left us the house and the lawyer the books—well, that would have been more reasonable."

John Gordon leaned forward in sudden understanding. So this was the solution of the problem. He wished he had finished his reading of the will. "Your father"— he began.

"Is an invalid," she finished.

"We have such a tiny apartment in the city. This country air would have done him so much good. And the garden—oh, what a garden I should have made of it in summer!" The girl sighed. "When does the lady take possession, Mr. Perkins?" she asked.

John Gordon stared, then silently accepted the real estate agent's name. "I—I haven't heard," he replied. "I'll have to talk things over with you later."

"And the books may remain for a time?" she asked him.

"Yes," he said.

The girl jumped up, going over to the window. "There's light at last!" she cried. "And the storm is going over. Do you think we dare venture yet? Father will be so anxious. He is alone until I come. There are just we two."

Half regretfully John Gordon followed to look over her shoulder to where the lights now shone below. "Can you walk it?" he asked anxiously. She had already started down the stair.

As the key turned rustily in the front door lock the two stood for a moment looking into each other's eyes. Into John Gordon's heretofore empty heart came a feeling of great and protective tenderness. He held out his arm, and quietly the girl placed her own within it; then downward they started through the drifts.

At the station she gave him her hand in farewell, but he was going into the city tonight, he told her, so they traveled together. Next day came a letter, which Miss Laidlaw, with glowing cheeks, read aloud to her father.

Mr. Gordon (so the agent Perkins wrote) upon being consulted as to the disposal of his property suggested that a caretaker be found, with salary to cover expenses. He himself did not care to trouble with the estate, so if Mr. Laidlaw and his daughter, were willing to accept the position indefinitely—

"Willing!" cried the girl, and joyously hastened to write their acceptance.

It was necessary many times throughout the winter for the agent to make his way to the Elmhurst home to see that all was satisfactory. It seemed also necessary for Miss Laidlaw herself to drive him after each visit down the hillside to the station, and into the life of John Gordon came the realization that all service has not its mercenary motive, and into his heart came a sweeter realization still.

It was when the flower borders of the garden were blooming gloriously that he approached, almost timidly, the bending figure of the girl.

Reading the unmistakable message of his eyes, she arose suddenly, waiting before him.

"Dear," he said gently, "will you take me into your care, as you have taken this neglected garden? I love you—love you so!" And when his arms were close about her John Gordon breathed a sigh of real content.

"My true legacy!" he murmured happily. And then he told her all about it.

PHYSICAL CULTURE.

As Good For the Business Man as For the Soldier In Training.

If physical culture is needed for those who bear arms in defense of the country why should it not be applied also to the soldiers of the business and professional world, the men in the commercial trenches? If a certain number of our citizens are compelled to go through a rigid course of physical training, why should not all others be called upon to follow suit?

The soft muscled clerk, the devitalized student, the overworked business man—they need awakening. Now, in many instances they are but little more than human ciphers, 25, 50 or 75 per cent men. With a little properly directed exercise they could be fitted for the ranks of the 100 per centers.

Six hours weekly, two hours for three days each week, would put the average flabby muscled, sedentary worker in fine shape. It would square his shoulders, stiffen his backbone, put some energy and enthusiasm into his makeup. It would make a real man of him.

Every man who is not in training should begin now. If he cannot train with other men let him follow a system of home training. Hard muscles, strong, stable nerves, high grade endurance—in short, a physique as "hard as nails"—should be the ambition of every sensible man.—Physical Culture.

BRIGHT BOYS AND GIRLS.

The Head and Physical Marks of Intelligence In Children.

In summing up his conclusions on the relationship of intelligence to the size and shape of the head Karl Pearson is quoted in the Journal of Heredity as making these statements about the intelligence of children:

"To sum up, then, while no characters in school children so far dealt with show very high correlation with intelligence, we may yet say that the intelligent boy is markedly conscientious, is moderately robust, athletic and popular; he tends rather to quick than to sullen temper. He is more self conscious and quieter than the dull boy; he has a slightly bigger head and possibly lighter pigmentation than those of more mediocre intelligence. His hair has a larger percentage of curliness.

"The intelligent girl is also markedly conscientious, moderately robust, athletic and popular. She, too, tends to quick rather than sullen temper. She is less self conscious than the dull girl and noisier than the girl of mediocre intelligence. It is the slow girl who is quiet and shy. The intelligent girl has a slightly bigger head than the dull girl, and her hair is more likely to be wavy and much less likely to be curly."

St. Sophia's Palimpsest.

Travelers who have visited the great Mohammedan mosque of St. Sophia in Constantinople tell of the visibility of inscriptions made in the interior of the building when it was a Christian church. These had been painted over by the Moslem conquerors, but time defeated their purpose of total effacement, says the Christian Herald. Over the entrance is the inscription in Latin, "I am the door; by me if any man enter in he shall be saved and shall go in and out, and he shall find pasture." The bricks in the great dome in the interior reveal this inscription: "Deus in medio eius; non commovebitur. Adiuvabit eam Deus vultu suo." The translation may be found in Psalm xlvi, 5. These facts are of interest in view of the present tottering condition of the Moslem power.

Presidential Golf.

At the Columbia Country club links at Washington during one of the tensest days of the crisis with Germany President Wilson came up to drive from one of the most difficult tees. Two members of the club stood aside to let the president "go through." That's a way they have at Washington. Mr. Wilson drove, and his ball shot off into precisely the place where he didn't want it to go. Experiences of that sort come even to chief magistrates; golf is no respecter of persons. The president turned to the two and remarked, "You see even out here I can't keep out of trouble."—Argonaut.

Here and There.

Clyde Watson, of Tyrone, was a visitor in Unionville on Sunday.

Two quart fruit jars—all glass, and five one-gallon jugs for sale at Green's

Joseph Kellegher and little son, of Bellefonte, spent Sunday in Tyrone.

Mrs. Edward Decker and little daughter spent part of last week with friends at State College.

Patronize our Cut Price Non-delivery Grocery department and save real money. Cohen & Co.

Mrs. Hugh N. Crider left Wednesday morning for Tyrone to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Freeman.

Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Peters, of Coleville, are rejoicing over the arrival of a young son which was born last Saturday.

Merchant John Bullock and little son left on Monday morning for Reading for the purpose of an outing and to visit friends.

Frank Crissman left Bellefonte Monday morning on a 36-hour furlough to visit friends in Sunbury. He is bugler in Troop L.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Saxe, of Scranton, are rejoicing over the arrival of a little daughter. The mother was formerly Miss Jennie Harper, of Bellefonte.

William Houser, of Meadeville, is in Bellefonte this week, coming here to see his mother, Mrs. Amanda Houser, who has been quite ill for some time.

Last Thursday Dr. H. A. Blair and family, while motoring through Bellefonte stopped off a short time to see the doctor's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank P. Blair, on Spring street.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Levi are receiving congratulations on the birth last Sunday night of a little daughter, their first born. Mrs. Levi before her marriage was Miss Anna Cherry.

George Harris, of Baltimore. Md., who had been visiting in Bellefonte at the home of his mother, Mrs. Rachael Harris, on Spring street, left for the southern city Tuesday afternoon.

Monday while the thermometer registered 110 degrees in the shade the enterprising Potter-Hoy Hardware firm, Bellefonte, was unloading a carload of bob sleds. That was going some all right.

William Brouse and family, of Bellefonte, are among those who are camping on Fishing Creek this week. They have a fine camp along this famous fishing stream and have been thoroughly enjoying the open air life.

The illustrated lecture of the Chautauqua Monday evening by Peter MacQueen gave his hearers an excellent idea of the war as it progresses in Europe. He was a war correspondent and on several occasions was up against the real thing, making several hairbreadth escapes.

Gilbert Boyer, who is a member of Co. D, 13th Infantry, United States Army, Williamsport, passed through Bellefonte from his home at Lemont, where he had been spending Sunday with his parents and friends. He was off on a forty-eight hour furlough.

Miss Louise Yarlington, granddaughter of the late C. T. Alexander, who had been visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Sheffer, left for her home in Richmond, Va., Tuesday morning. She is a bright young lady and as soon as possible will take an examination for a government position.

W. Harrison Walker, Esq., has accepted a local agency of the National Surety Company of New York. The appointment permits Mr. Walker with the authority of U. S. Government ratings to write single bonds up to $827,000, this being the largest which can be executed by any one company in the United States.

While riding a bicycle near the home of his father, County Treasurer David Chambers, at Clarence last Thursday evening, Roy Chambers was run down by a Ford car. The automobile passed over his legs but fortunately did not fracture them. Roy was considerably bruised, but happily escaped with no serious injury.

William P. Humes left Bellefonte Tuesday afternoon for Somerset, where he met some parties and from there they proceeded to Elk Lick located back in the pioneer part of the county, for the purpose of looking over coal lands in which Mr. Humes and his sister have an interest. Coal located within any reasonable distance of a railroad is worth some money just now and Mr. Humes is just looking up his holdings of this kind.

This week, through the real estate agency of Robert Hunter, C. C. Shuey, of Bellefonte, sold his residence on High street to Aaron Katz who will occupy it together with his son, William Katz and family. This is among the most desirable properties in the town because of its prominent location. A number of years ago it was purchased by Mr. Shuey who spent considerable money on repairs which transformed it into one of the most homelike places in the borough. Mr. Shuey and family are expected to vacate the property by November 1st. It is Mr. Shuey's purpose to purchase a lot somewhere else in Bellefonte and build a cosy little home as soon as possible. In the departure of the Shuey family that vicinity of the town loses a most excellent class of people who will be greatly missed.

Between now and the 1st of January 100,000 Sammies will be in Europe. Centre county will be represented by her quota of brave soldiers.

Mr. and Mrs. William J. Dorworth, of Baltimore, were arrivals in town yesterday to visit for a few days with the former's parents, Dr. and Mrs. E. S. Dorworth.

James Dawson, of DuBois, arrived in Bellefonte Saturday night, and will spend several days with his mother, Mrs. William Dawson, who is ill at her home on Spring street.

Miss Ellen Downing, of Downingtown, Pa., who spent Sunday and Monday in Bellefonte as the guest of her sister, Mrs. Jacob Valentine, left for her home Tuesday morning.

Philip Meyer, ex-Commissioner of Centre county, was seized with a second stroke of paralysis on Friday evening at his home in Centre Hall. His condition is said to be very serious.

Mrs. George Kerstetter, of Harrisburg, arrived in Bellefonte Saturday and remained until Sunday as a guest of her sister, Mrs. H. C. Yeager, on north Spring street. She was accompanied by her son, Walton.

Clyde N. Grove, who had been in Bellefonte on a furlough as the guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Grove, left Wednesday morning for Tyrone where he is a member of the Sheridan Troop. He expects to be called at any time.

If there is anybody in Bellefonte who wants to make $1000,00 right off the reel here's his chance. Simond Saxe, of New York City, has offered that amount in a Liberty bond for the first American aviator who will drop a bomb over Berlin.

Miss Jones and Miss Cooper, prominently identified with the public schools of Cambria county and at present engaged as instructors at the teachers summer school at State College, visited here last Saturday with Misses Bessie and Alice Dorworth.

Betty Tobin, Helen Hoffer, Jack Doyle and Harry Lane, of Williamsport, left Monday morning for an extended automobile trip through the eastern cities and towns. They were chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. Doyle. The young ladies are known in Bellefonte.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. will accept back into the service all pensioned men from the ages of 40 to 70 years. That hits our good friend David Barlett, of Bellefonte. He is still about as good as "Jim" Corbet. He has been one of the faithful employes and could do his bit to help the railroad out when it is in need of him.

Marshall Cook, son of Charles F. Cook, a graduate of Pennsylvania State College, who had been holding a good position at Post Washington, Long Island, N. Y., arrived home Sunday. He is a member of the U. S. Signal Corps and came home to await orders. He is a good young man to have in such an important position.

Mrs. W. C. Stoddart and her son Jack of Wyncote, are guests at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Keller, on east Linn street. Mrs. Stoddart will be remembered as Miss Caroline Orvis, sister of Mrs. Keller. From Saturday until Sunday afternoon, Mr. and Mrs. Keller had as their guests Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Miller and Frederick Miller, the former's brother, from Lancaster.

"Whittie" Farrel, a student of the Bellefonte Academy, enlisted in the Hospital Corps at the Bellefonte Armory. He afterward wrote home to his parents as to what he had done. He promptly received word from his mother that he was under eighteen years of age and that his parents would not give their consent. He was finally excused and left for home Tuesday.

Saturday Samuel Dale, of DuBois, a classmate at State College of "Archie" Allison and the writer, was in Bellefonte on his way home from Houserville, where he had been called on account of the serious illness of his mother, Mrs. Kate Dale who is 81 years of age. He is a mail carrier in DuBois and keeper of bees so that his time is pretty well taken up. He has not been in this vicinity for a number of years. His brother, Wesley Dale, of Williamsport, was also here on the same mission.

The young man with a will and determination and the brains to back it up is the fellow who succeeds. This was the case of Graham Hunter, son of Robert Hunter, of Bellefonte. He is a graduate of State College. However, instead of choosing the army Graham wanted to do something for Uncle Sam in this war by joining the navy. He applied in Williamsport but for some trifling thing he was rejected after undergoing a physical examination. Not to be outwitted at this turn-down he took the train for Philadelphia and went before the examining board and was accepted. There is not a young man in the service who will be more capable to perform the duties of a "Jackie" than just our friend Graham.

Jacob Kaup, of Pittsburgh, arrived in Bellefonte Wednesday afternoon to spend a week with his brother, R. M. Kaup, in Bush Addition.

Men's and young men's suits, beginning at $10.00 and ending at $17.00. They are wonderful values at their respective prices. See Cohen & Co.

Mrs. Thomas Moore, of Philadelphia, arrived in Bellefonte Sunday morning to spend several days with her mother, Mrs. William Dawson, who has been quite ill at her home.

Irvin Adams, who for several weeks had been the chemist for the Titan Metal Co., resigned his position on Tuesday and on Wednesday morning left on the train for Boston, Mass.

John Decker, of Potter township, was in Bellefonte this week securing signers to a petition that will enable him to have his name put on the ballot so his friends can vote for him for Jury Commissioner at the coming primaries.

W. L. Daggett, proprietor of the Bush House, Bellefonte, will soon introduce to his patrons the single leaf register. It does away with the large bulky book on the counter and every day each leaf is filed away so that at any time reference can be made to it.

Carlton M. Lichtenthaler, son of Attorney and Mrs. G. H. Lichtenthaler of Philipsburg, who has for several months been located at Baltimore, Md., with an engineering corps, has enlisted in the Aviation Corps of the navy. He left for Pensacola, Fla., where he will take four months training.

Miss Grace Marvin, the milliner, leaves Bellefonte today for Elmira, N. Y., where she will spend about two weeks with relatives. From there she will go to her home at Binghamton, N. Y., and before returning to Bellefonte will go to New York City to select her fall and winter stock.

Ensign Donald Gettig, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Gettig, who is now busy recruiting for the United States Navy, arrived in Bellefonte from Williamsport Tuesday in search of musicians, landsmen, and machinists for the aviation corps. Those who would like something of this kind should look him up. These positions pay good wages.

Mrs. Louise Harris and Miss Myra Humes, of Bellefonte, will be among those who will leave for Atlantic City on Saturday. Mrs. Harris will remain there several days and then go to Parkesburg, Chester county, where she will make a short visit with her nephew, Rev. William Potter VanTries. Miss Humes' brother, William P. Humes, will join her at the seashore next week and they will remain there for several weeks.

Wilbur Hoy, the handy man in Green's drug store, Bellefonte, is quite a genius in fixing up windows so that they will attract attention. By the aid of an electric fan he has strips of different kind of blotting paper flying around in the window that can't help but make the passer-by take a peep at the window which advertises their candies. When the fan is not going it looks like a whipped rooster with his head under his feathers.

Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Whitton, of North Philipsburg, with their son Irvin at the wheel, accompanied by their daughters, Mrs. Orie Wade and her son, Floyd, of this place, and Mrs. C. M. Strange and her three children, Forest, Chester and John, of Youngstown, Ohio, and Miss Goldie Leport, of Philipsburg, autoed to Penn's Cave on Sunday and report it a most interesting sight to see. On their return they stopped at the home of Ellis Way, at Unionville, where they were pleasantly entertained.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Thompson returned Monday from their extended automobile trip through the New England states which was enjoyed immensely. Mr. Thompson is quite an observer as he goes along and after he left Pennsylvania he wasn't very favorably impressed with the farming country. Some of the farms up in Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Connecticut are so stoney that it would almost be impossible to get a mustard seed on them. When it comes to good roads, however, no States in the Union have better. He rode for miles and miles on concrete roads.

George L. McCullough, of Clearfield, father of Walter McCullough, of Bellefonte, stenographer in the local State Road offices, has received a promotion. For years he had been freight agent at Clearfield, but under the new arrangement the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., has promoted him to Division freight agent with headquarters at Tyrone. He will have charge of all the freight business for the Penney on its divisions radiating out of Tyrone. He is a gentleman whose personal appearance dignifies the position, thus he will command the highest respect of the employes and the public with which he will daily come in contact. Mr. McCullough has been identified with the progressive affairs of Clearfield and his wise and generous counsel will be missed. He has been in Bellefonte a number of times and his friends here will be glad to hear of his advancement.

PATRIOTISM!

PATRIOTISM! A word to conjure with, and on most every tongue these days.

We all have it but—even the hardiest tree will die if shut away from the rays of the sun. Therefore, why expect our patriotism to survive the ordeal of eternal darkness that the most of us subject it to.

Let's unearth it, brush it up and put it in our window where not only others but ourselves as well can see it. We will be surprised at the results. Not only will we begin talking patriotism but our neighbors as well.

Now we don't mean that we are lacking in patriotism nor that we will be found wanting when the time for action arrives but we do mean that many of the citizens of this glorious country taketheir patriotism in altogether too matter of fact way. By so doing rob themselves of a great inspiration.

Systematic deep breathing before an open window has been known to add an inch to the chest measure. Try standing before an open window each morning mentally visualizing the greatness of the United States, and repeating aloud—"I am an American Citizen—This is My Country" and we will wager that you will find that not only have you added to your chest expansion but you have also added to your height. Try it. Grow!!!! Expand!!!! Try to realize that you are a part owner in the greatest country—the greatest government and are a member of the greatest nation the world has ever seen.

Make you patriotism a personal patriotism. Take it into you home---your business While on the subject don't forget that the grocery trade has a tremendous responsibility on its shoulders. It must see that the supply of foods in this country is not wasted---that not a single individual be allowed to over-buy or hoard food.

We are a part of the Commissary Department of the nation. Let us prove ourselves zealous servants of the common good with, "business going on as usual."

That's real patriotism---beneficial to the country and to ourselves.

"Out of Work, Old Man?" "But the Money Comes In JUST THE SAME!"

Takes more than a compound fracture to put you out of the running, when you've an ÆTNA ACCIDENT POLICY.

Any time any accident comes along, your ÆTNA steps right in and becomes the wage-earner for your family—

With $25 or $50 a week for total disability, according to the nature of the accident; and $12.50 or $25 for partial disability. Payable every four weeks.

If you don't think it comes in fine, just ask my wife. She almost went to pieces until I told her I'd had the good sense to

ÆTNA-IZE

We'd have been up against it for fair. You can't hold off the landlord and the grocer and butcher forever, you know. And I'd hate like sin to have the wife try to earn our living.

As it is, we've wasted for nothing, and the ÆTNA paid my surgeon's bill is the bargain. If I'd gone to the hospital, it would have paid the charges for me there.

In fact, I've gotten such big returns that it's almost a shame to tell how little I pay for the policy.
